State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray following her victory over challenger Garrett Bradley in Nov. 1998.

Murray closes chapter at State House

Considers a run for selectman

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Tuesday morning found her where she has spent most of her time over the past 2-1/2 decades.

Easily spotted by her shock of white hair and bright blue dress surrounded by middle-aged men in dark wool suits, Mary Jeanette Murray strolled around the Speaker of the House's rostrum, grabbing elbow after elbow and whispering something to each of the men.

Except on this day Murray wasn't just being the "den mother of the House" as she likes to call herself. She wasn't straightening out a tie, or fixing a collar, or giving some grandmotherly advice to a younger colleague. No, she was doing the least favorite thing she has ever done on this bright, sunny, yet frigid morning.

She was saying goodbye.

Tuesday was the last day for the 24-year, 12-term state representative from Cohasset. Yesterday, 30-year-old Democrat Garrett Bradley was sworn in as the new state representative for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, marking the end of an era — one that saw the term constituent service redefined.

The decision not to seek reelection as state representative wasn't easy for Murray who has been a public servant for residents of Cohasset since she was elected to the board of selectmen in 1971.

A little over a year ago, the 76-year old Murray announced she was finally heeding the wishes of her children and would not seek another term as state representative.

"My oldest and youngest [Phillip and Lillian] had been after me for six years to step down," Murray said Tuesday in between trips to the last informal session of her career. "Nate [her middle child] kept saying I should, and then he joined the chorus a year ago last September. He said it was the right time to just start to smell the roses."

The decision wasn't easy for Murray who has been a public servant for residents of Cohasset since she was elected to the board of selectmen in 1971.

"I said to [Nate] 'But I still want to help people,'" Murray, a grandmother of five, remembered. "He said 'You did that before you went in and you can do that again.'"

The past few months, since the election, have been emotional ones for Murray. From being escorted to her final speech before the House of Representatives by a Marine Corp Color Guard, to her last walk through the House Chamber, the normally Marine-tough Murray hasn't been able to hold back the tears.

"My mother always said my eyes were too close to my kidneys," she joked, almost embarrassed. "This is a terrible day for an interview."

On her last day Murray accomplished something she hadn't in a long time – sat at a clean desk, a feat so unusual she got ribbed repeatedly for it. "The stack of papers at one time was about this high all across," she said holding her hands about a foot off the table. "Then I realized a year ago, that all I was doing was pushing papers."

Her legislative aide of eight years,

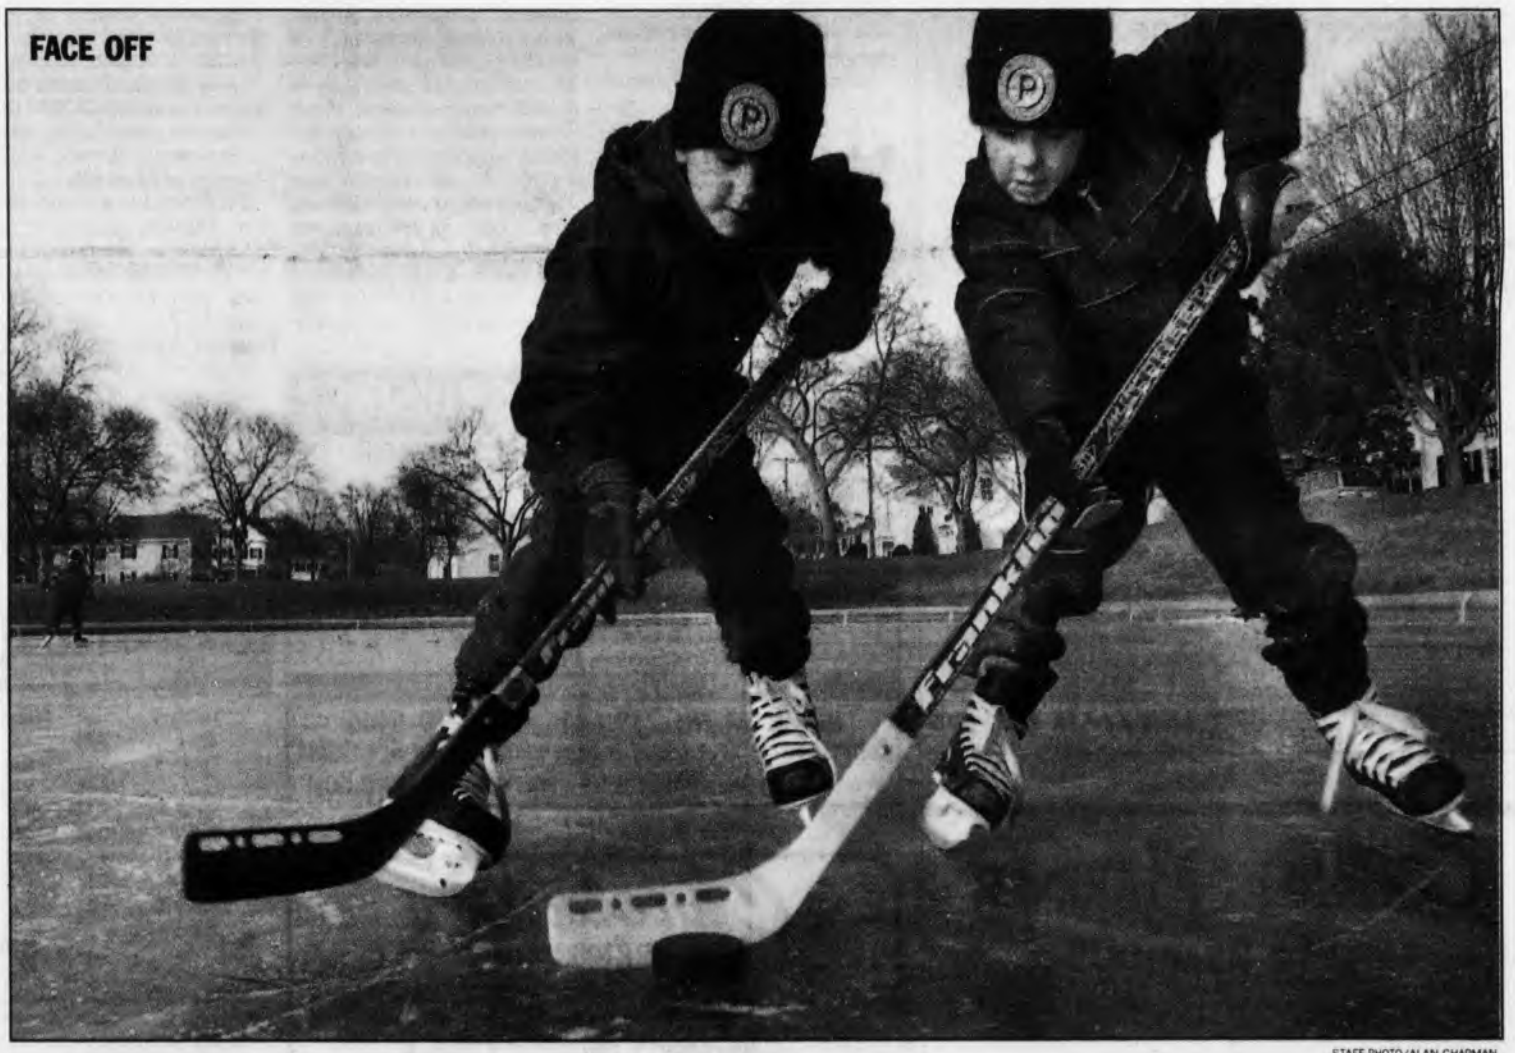
Boatyard facelift planned

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A new project proposed by Border Street boatyard owner Peter Roy would fix up the deteriorating site, add additional apartment space, and allow the Cohasset Lobster Pound and Mill River Marine Railway to remain on site. Plans are to also provide additional access to the Gulf River and harbor for canoeists and kayakers, according to a report filed by project designers CLE Engineering.

The proposal was revealed as part of a public walkthrough at the request of the state's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs [EOEA] and Dave Shepardson of the EOEA Massachusetts Environmental Protection Act office, in response to a notice of project change filed by Roy for the project.



According to CLE Vice-President Carlos Penà, the project would keep "water-dependent" businesses on the site, while adding public access to the Gulf River.

The Lobster Pound and boatyard workshop — known as Cohasset's 'Motif No. 1' — will be repaired. The workshop will have its structural supports repaired and have a residence built in its upper-level.

Scituate water team assists in Cohasset pond rescue

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An early morning skate on picture-perfect Lily Pond in Cohasset turned into a near tragedy Wednesday morning.

Cohasset resident Martin J. Hernon of Lantern Lane planned to go into work a little late. So instead of going for a run, he drove to King Street, parked behind the water treatment plant and donned his hockey skates for some exercise.

"I had my puck and stick and had been skating for about 10 minutes," the 52-year-old said in an interview Wednesday afternoon. "I knew the pond was frozen but I didn't realize there was a hole."

Hernon said the ice was black and so was the open water.

Cohassest Officer Richard Yocum, who was first on the scene, said he could understand how the mishap occurred.

"There was no wind and with the reflection of the sun, the area didn't look like open water," said Yocum, who was on his way to work just before 8 a.m. and heard the call come over the radio.

"There was no wind and with the reflection of the sun, the area didn't look like open water."

"I notified headquarters that I was only a mile away," he said. "When I arrived Officer John Small was just coming in."

Yocum said Hernon was 300-400 yards from shore.

"I grabbed a canoe and paddle, walked across the ice to the open area and canoed out to reach him," he said. Yocum said he had Hernon hold onto the canoe until help arrived.

Within minutes the water rescue team from the Scituate Fire Department was on the scene.

According to Yocum, the Scituate firefighters wear "gumby" suits that provide floatation and insulation. Two firefighters got into the water to help lift out Hernon who was pulled by a rope onto the ice and then placed on a special sled.

"We sent over a dive truck, an ice rescue sled, and four firefighters with ice rescue suits," said Scituate Fire Dept. Captain Brian McGowan.

"We basically backed Cohasset up and assisted them in getting the man into the ambulance. It was mutual aid. We didn't send in the dive rescue; we would've if it was more extensive."

Scituate Fire Chief Ed Hurley said the Scituate rescue team simply acted in conjunction with Cohasset's. "Scituate and Cohasset both have ice sleds and both of them were deployed," he said. "We have a dive team and a truck that's equipped with dive gear and the ice sled and different rescue tools."

The total amount of time Hernon was in the water was about 15 minutes, Yocum said. Hernon was transported to South Shore Hospital by Scituate ambulance where he was treated and released.

Hernon was losing strength and was struggling a lot, police said, but was conscious and stable when he was put in the ambulance, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Police said neighbors heard him screaming and the dispatch center received numerous 911 calls.

Jackson warned that people should

20 fire hydrants to be replaced

The Cohasset Water Department recently awarded a contract to McLaughlin Brothers Contracting Corp. of Brockton to replace 20 fire hydrants in the Cohasset water distribution system.

"McLaughlin Brothers, at $48,786, was the lowest of the six bids submitted, and was almost half of the engineers estimate of $80,655 for the project," said John McNabb, chairman of the Cohasset Water Commission. "This cost savings will help us to complete additional needed work in the distribution system to improve water service to our water consumers."

"We will be replacing 20 fire hydrants, to remove about 10 hydrants with obsolete fire connections and 10 others with various mechanical problems, and replacing them with new, modern hydrants," he said. "While all of the replaced hydrants were in working order, and could be used in a fire, the new hydrants will provide improved operational capabilities and improved fire protection to the Town of Cohasset."

"Hydrants will be replaced," McNabb said, "on the following streets: Jerusalem Road, Nichols Road, Lothrop Lane, North Main Street, South Main Street, King Street, Beechwood Street, Brewster Road, Highland Ave., Ash Street, Pond Street, Spring Street, Oak Street, and Hill Street."

All affected residents will be contacted at least 24 hours before their water is shut off.

Because some of the hydrants do not have valves some portions of some streets will have their water shut off for the time needed, no more than a day at a time, to complete the repairs. All affected residents will be contacted at least 24 hours before their water is shut off. During the hydrant replacement, new valves will also be installed to allow for greater control over the distribution system.

McNabb said the hydrant replacement work will start in January and should be completed by the end of June, 2001.

Clearing the air

Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey cleared the air over fumes that caused the evacuation and early dismissal of the Osgood School last month.

On Dec. 11, an odor was detected in one classroom and the office area so officials evacuated the building as a precaution. Malvey said the Cohasset police and fire departments responded to the scene, as did the gas company.

According to Malvey, exhaust fumes from the building's heating system seeped their way into the fresh air flow. He also said the fumes disappeared as quickly as they came, but to be safe, Osgood students were sent home early. Malvey credited the Osgood School phone tree for quickly alerting parents to the early release time.

He added that the problem has been resolved.

"Hopefully it will never happen again," he said.

Raises for subs

The school committee voted to increase substitute teacher's pay to $75 per day; $80 after 20 days. Because of the comparatively low rate Cohasset pays, the town has had a tough time recruiting substitutes to fill-in in classrooms across the district, school officials said.

The shortage has necessitated that full-time teachers and aides to fill in during their breaks, costing the district an additional $25 to $35 a period. A substitute pay rate increase would actually cost the schools less over the length of a school day, and attract more substitutes.

The average daily rate in the area, according to Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey, is between $69 and $81.

Property revaluation

The Cohasset assessors will conduct a state-mandated revaluation for fiscal year 2002. By law the assessors are mandated to value property within 10 percent plus or minus of the real estate market. Town meeting determines the budget within the constraints of Proposition 2-fi. A revaluation of property values cannot result in added town spending. When property values increase substantially the tax rate generally decreases. If market trends continue, there could conceivably be increases of property values from 20 to 30 percent in some neighborhoods. All other things being equal, if this is the case the tax rate will decrease by a like amount.

Cohasset along with most cities and towns in Massachusetts has been experiencing a robust real estate market due to the healthy economy. In an effort to keep pace with the appreciation in the market the assessors have conducted interim adjustments for fiscal year's 2000 and 2001. The overall valuation of the town increased by 6 percent for fiscal year 2000 and 7 percent for fiscal year 2001.

The Board of Assessors submitted to the Department of Revenue the necessary forms for the approval of the Fiscal 2001 Tax Rate after the annual classification hearing with the Board of Selectmen. The Board of Selectmen voted a single tax rate for Fiscal 2001. The new tax rate will be $14.59.

This press release was provided by the assessors' office at Town Hall.

RE tax bills

The town of Cohasset has issued the fiscal 2001 third quarter tax bills due Feb. 1. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the board of assessors at 383-4114 to confirm the correct mailing address or the treasurer/collector at 383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

The FY01 total tax is based on the new FY01 assessment. The new assessments are based on sales market activity during calendar 1999 and early 2000 to reflect the value of real estate as of Jan. 1, 2000. Taxpayers who feel that their property is overassessed and want to contest their assessment must file for an abatement with the board of assessors by Feb. 1.

Property tax exemptions are available to qualifying elderly, widows, blind persons and veterans with a 10 percent service-connected disability or greater. Call the assessors at 383-4114 for more information.

Applications for property tax exemptions must be received by the board of assessors no later than March 28.

Water rate hike comments sought

The Massachusetts Department of Telecommunications and Energy has established a timetable for public comment on the proposed rate increase filed by the Massachusetts-American Water Company.

Massachusetts-American, which provides water service in Hull, Hingham and North Cohasset, is seeking to raise rates by 16 percent, or more than $75 per year for the average residential customer.

The DTE will hold a public hearing at Hingham Town Hall, 210 Central St., on Tuesday, Jan. 16 at 7 p.m.

Ratepayers, residents, and other interested parties are encouraged to attend the hearing and register their opinions.

Written comments can be submitted to:

100K jump in SPED funding proposed

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

By providing more services in-house, Stephen Kaplan – the new director of student services for Cohasset Public Schools – asked for just $100,000 more than last year in the FY-2002 special education budget.

The request came as a relief to the school committee who has been battling skyrocketing special education costs over the past couple of years. The special education budget last year increased by $300,000.

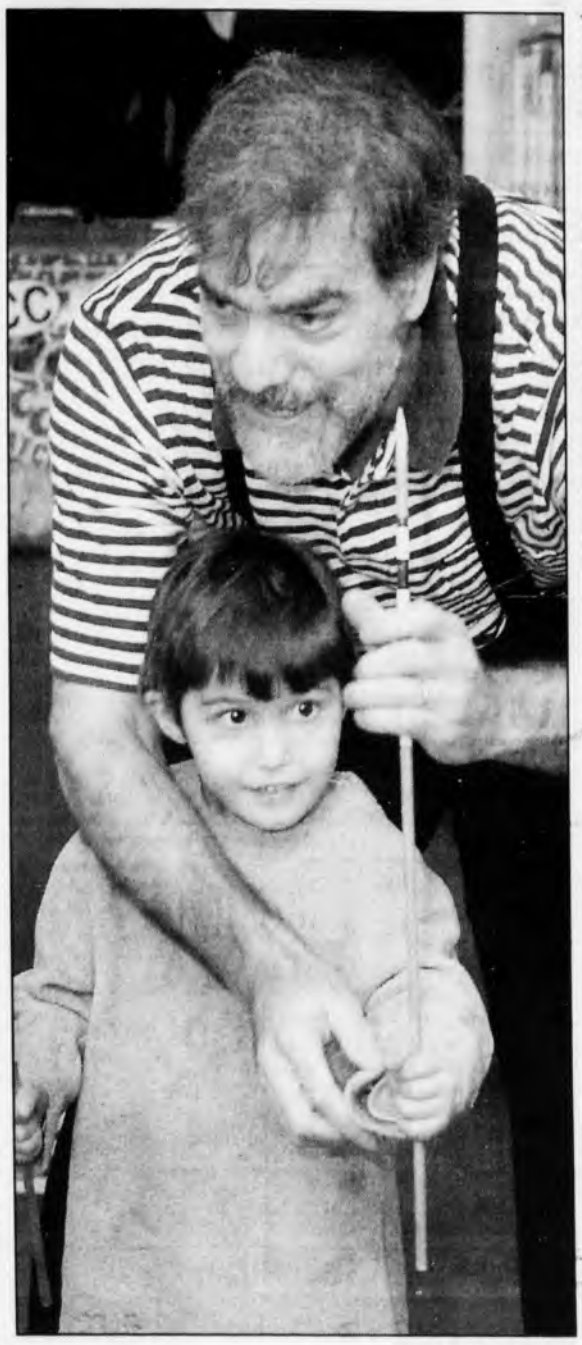
The proposed budget, which Kaplan presented to the school committee at its Dec. 21 meeting, would bring the student services bottom-line to $1,160,450 if fully funded, including money for a new school psychologist, and reading/language specialist. He told the board that he expects to save nearly $80,000 by adding these two positions, instead of contracting those services out.

"There was an excessive amount in contractual services, and as I was going through the budget asking, 'Are we getting the biggest bang for our dollar?,' the answer to most of those questions was 'No,'" he said. Kaplan added that too much money was being spent in after-hours tutoring and reading programs – services that he said would instead be better administered in school, by staff specialists.

"There was an excessive amount in contractual services, and as I was going through the budget asking, 'Are we getting the biggest bang for our dollar?,' the answer to most of those questions was 'No.'"

— Stephen Kaplan, director of student services

He also asked for $67,974 to add three days of additional speech therapy for the district's students.



The budget also provides for updated diagnostic tests and improved database software to better track students.

The budget, said Kaplan, is as cut down as it can be and still provide the proper services. "We worked pretty hard to do that [keep it down to $100,000]," he said.

However, he did say the numbers could change, depending on the number of students qualifying for services, and on how much the town receives in state aid money.

The budget was met positively at first glance by the school committee, but the group expects to take a deeper look at not only the student services budget, but the entire district budget at its meeting tonight.

Schools seek 8 percent budget hike

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though the Cohasset School Committee initially decided to fund five new teaching positions, including the much-sought after technology aide position at the Osgood School, the budget would be pushing $10.4 million for FY-2002 — too high for committee members.

The board is expected to further discuss the budget at its meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the middle/high school auditorium.

"It would be an 8 percent increase if we were to stop here," said committee member Mark DeGiacomo after the first round of cuts to the proposed budget at the group's Dec. 21 meeting. The committee, which said it was pleased with the budgets proposed by the town's three principals, initially leaned towards accepting middle/high school Principal Dr. Michael Jones' request for four additional teachers at the middle school level. It also hoped to reinstate the Osgood technology aide position which was cut last year, and increase the hours for the district's art and music teachers.

The prospect of these additions concerned both DeGiacomo and committee member Stephanie Noble, who worry not only about what the additional salaries would do to the school budget, but also the additional amount of health insurance costs the town would have to pick up. Both said the middle school teaching positions were probably the number one priority in the budget, but it would be tough to make that happen without further budget cuts.

Initial cuts included half of the schools' substitute and supply budget requests, and Osgood School Principal Marilee Cantelmo's requests for an activity aide, an assistant principal, and more office help. But Cantelmo's requests did prompt Noble to suggest the committee should look at what the Osgood office needs to run more efficiently.

"We have to look at what the Osgood's needs are, what the office needs daily," she said.

The board did largely support the Deer Hill School budget as presented by Principal Paul Callahan, except for the substitute and supply line item cuts.

District-wide, the board is mulling over whether to hire two additional janitors for the schools. Cantelmo, Callahan and Jones had asked for additional custodial staff to keep the school's clean, especially during the upcoming school renovation and expansion project.

Though the committee said it was pleased with the thinness of the budget requests, the biggest debate may lie in the four new positions at the middle school. Jones told the board that without the new teachers, seventh-grade class size will average in the low 30's, and in the high 20's for the eighth grade. If two teachers were hired, class numbers would still be high – mid 20's in the eighth grade and high 20's in the seventh grade. If the four teachers are hired, average class size would be mid 20's for the seventh grade and low 20's for the eighth grade, a more acceptable amount, though not preferred by Jones.

"Next year will be a worse situation than we have this year," he said about class sizes which already top out in the 30's for some classes this year. "And if you increase the number of classes and students each teacher teaches, you ruin the middle school concept."

Committee chairman Pat Martin agreed, saying, "We have a less than perfect situation now, next year we'll be far from perfect."

Jones added, if the positions aren't added, the committee would be "taking the middle school, which is one of the best in the state, and setting it back."

The board also showed early support for Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey's request for a district business manager. The position, according to Malvey, would oversee computer and data processing, collective bargaining with non-certified personnel, grant writing and other office work.

"A good business manager can pay for his position [through grants] very quickly," Malvey said.

Lilly Sestito

Coldwell Banker Hunneman in Cohasset is proud to honor Lilly Sestito as the top sales associate for the month of November. A longtime resident of Cohasset, Lilly has a reputation for providing the highest level of service to her clients and customers. "Lilly has been in our Cohasset office for almost ten years now, but this has been by far her most successful. Lilly amazes me with her energy. Many have known her around town for her local ice cream business, or for her unforgettable singing voice. Now she is known for her great selling skills. Her customers love her sense of humor and appreciate her strong work ethic, which contributes to her continuous success," said Erica Ford, Cohasset Office Manager.

For exceptional service and exceptional results, please call Lilly today at 781-383-9202.

Smiths are proudest grandparents in town

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

COUNT YOUR BLESSINGS

Hello Cohasset! I hope that everyone had a safe and Happy New Year and that we are all ready to work on our resolutions! I have noticed a number of new families in town as well as some families moving to new places. If you have any welcomes you would like to have placed or a special goodbye message to any of your friends, please send them in. I just read a message on a Cohasset newsboard from a resident who moved from here eight years ago. It said that until you don't have something day in and day out,(ie. Cohasset) you won't really know how lucky you were to have it. I think that when we all stop for a moment each day and look at what we have in our town, we can all see how special and wonderful this town is. One of my resolutions for this year is to do just that, stop, look around and count my blessings in all the "little things." Cohasset is just one of those things and for that, I am truly grateful.

NEW ARRIVAL

We have some very happy and proud grandparents in town! Russell and Susan Smith of Fernway became grandparents to Matthew Russell Daileader on Nov. 17, 2000. Matthew was born to Hingham native, Heidi (Smith) Daileader and her husband John, weighing in at 7 lbs. 14 oz. and measuring 20 ins. long. His other grandparents who are equally delighted are Judy and Lee Peacock of Hingham and Marion and Bob Daileader of Clifton Park, N.Y. Having met little Matthew a few weeks ago, let me just tell all of you that he is adorable! His uncle Adam and aunt Emma would both agree, I am sure. Matthew, Heidi and John all live in Chappaqua, N.Y. Congratulations to you all.

FIRST CHOICE

I got a nice piece of news about Miss Kristen James, daughter of Terry and Brian of Buttonwood Lane. Kristen attends the South Shore VoTech school in Hanover. She made the high honor roll and after six exploratory shops, got into her first choice which was electronics. Out of all the children that apply, they only select 10. This is a great accomplishment Kristen, keep up the great work!

HOCKEY RAFFLE

The list of winners in the First Annual Holiday Raffle for the Varsity Hockey Team continued to grow over the month of December! The following is an update to the list of winners drawn by the merchants who donated the daily prizes. Winners are from Cohasset unless otherwise noted.

Dec 18- Regina Church-A children's sweatshirt from Cards & Shards and two rounds of golf for four at Par-Tee; Dec 19-Brad Potolicchio, (second-time winner) a Deluxe Photo Album from Nobles Camera and a $20 gift certificate to Newport Creamery; Dec 20-Helene Garber, also a second-time winner! $20 to Good Sports and 2 pizzas from the Cohasset House of Pizza; Dec 21-Howie Noble, a cut and blow-dry and a make-up consultation at Rudolph Adamo; Dec 22-Maureen McElguinn, $30 bouquet of fresh flowers from Cohasset Greenery; Dec 23- Simeone Family, one month membership to Fitness First; Dec 24-John and Peggy Chapman, another second-time winner! $75 discount on full vehicle detailing at Cohasset Collision; Dec 25-Ann Rasmussen, $100 from Fleet Bank; Dec 26-The Rankin Family, $50 to Dependable Cleaners; Dec 27-Jeff Durkin, $25 to Silver Spoon Café; Dec 28-Pat O'Connor, $25 to Joseph's Hardware; Dec 29-Stephen and MaryBeth Carrier, Free lube, oil and filter at Cohasset Sunoco and two RGP Pizzas; Dec 30-Bodner Family, $25 to Cohasset Plaza Cleaners; Dec 31-Jeff Vickers from Duxbury, $100 from Pilgrim Cooperative Bank

The Hockey Boosters sincerely thank all the merchants who donated prizes to this raffle and to all the wonderful people who purchased raffle tickets. Such enthusiastic support made this raffle a great success. We look forward to doing it again next year. Thank you and we hope all of you have Happy New Year, from the players and coaches of the Cohasset Middle High School Varsity Hockey Team.

ELECTED PRESIDENT

David L. Keefe, MD, a native of Cohasset who know resides in Newport, RI with his wife and seven children was recently elected president of the Boston Fertility Society. The Boston Fertility Society fosters the exchange of information in cutting-edge research, technology, counseling and treatment methods for reproductive medicine and infertility. Dr. Keefe, is currently the director of the Division of Reproductive Medicine and Infertility at Women & Infants Hospital and at New England Medical Center in Massachusetts.

PHILLIPS ACADEMY HONORS

Phillips Academy of Andover, Mass announced that Kara Gaughen, class of '02' and daughter of Robert and Margaret Gaughen of Cohasset was recently named to the honor roll for the fall term. In order to make this honor, a student must maintain at least a 5-point grade average on a 6-point scale. Great work, Kara!

THAYER HONORS

Thayer Academy of Braintree also announced its first tri-semester honor roll and two seventh graders from Cohasset were on it. Catherine M. Ernst for Effort and Joseph M. Rosano for Achievement and Effort. Fantastic effort on both of your parts, keep up the great work.

ASTRONOMY DAY

Boston University announced some news about Cohasset Resident, Elizabeth Condos. Elizabeth was one of over 250 eighth- and ninth-grade students who recently participated in "Space and Astronomy Day," a conference jointly sponsored by Boston University and John Hopkins University's Center for Talented Youth. Boston University's Learning Resource Network collaborated with its Department of Astronomy and Center for Space Physics to organize and to develop the program. During this day-long program held at Boston University on Nov. 19, students were able to explore aspects of space and astronomy through talks and workshops led by space scientists and researchers. The workshops "Light: Bend It, Break It" and "Why Yes, We Are Rocket Scientists" allowed the students to examine scientific topics, such as prisms and spectroscopy and rocket propulsion, through hands-on experiments. Elizabeth is an eighth-grade student at Cohasset Middle High School. What a great experience for you Elizabeth!

VALENTINE SOIREE

Don't forget to mark Feb. 10 on your calendars for the St. Valentine's Soiree! It is being held at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham from 7-11 p.m. The cost is $40 per person or $75 per couple and includes dancing, music and food. It is being held by the PSO and is bound to be a wonderful time!

That is it for this week. Make sure to send in your news to me in one of the following manners. ATSchoolsin@aol.com or jenpiep@yahoo.com 622 CJC Highway 923-1057 Have a Great Week!

GARDEN CLUB

Blood drive is Jan. 10

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Jan. 10. The Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main Street and Summer Street from 2 to 7 p.m. As in the past, babysitting will be provided from 3 to 5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

The American Red Cross is asking all eligible blood donors in the Cohasset area to give blood when the bloodmobile comes to Cohasset. According to Cathy Pray, director, "Only five out of every hundred people give blood, and the number of new donors decreased dramatically last year. First-time donors are urgently needed to replace donors who have moved away or become ineligible to donate."

The best way to give blood for the first time is to come with a friend who is experienced in the donation process. New donors usually find the procedure easy and painless and most come back regularly to donate. "The biggest obstacle seems to be overcoming that initial fear," said Pray. "That's why we're counting on our regular donors to help by bringing a friend to this blood drive."

Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 1-800-448-3543.

Each year, tens of thousands of people serve as volunteers with the American Red Cross blood program in New England. Most donate blood. Others volunteer their time and energy to making each blood drive a success. These dedicated volunteers help fulfill their community's needs — they are a group the American Red Cross likes to call "Hometown Heroes.

HOMETOWN HERO

Louis Eaton is truly a "Hometown Hero." He began donating blood in 1946 after moving to Cohasset. "When I came here in '46, I heard they were organizing a blood drive, and I thought, why not?" Eaton said. "I didn't start donating because I knew someone who needed blood. I just realized that blood was needed and how easy it actually was to donate." And Eaton has been donating ever since. In fact, he has donated more than 17 gallons of blood so far, and has no plans to stop in the near future, even if he is 82 years young! "My first wife and I were married for 51 years. She didn't donate blood for a variety of reasons. My present wife of six years can't donate either, so you could say I'm donating for three!"

Through the generosity of their time and effort, blood donors and volunteers like Eaton give a second chance to people who might not otherwise survive. "The only time I was nervous was the first time I donated," Eaton said. "Part of the reason I still give blood is that I'm A negative, and it's needed. The need for blood has risen tremendously. I know many people require transfusions during treatment, and I have the blood, so why not help them out? It doesn't hurt, and I've met so many nice people in the process."

Family proud as Bradley sworn in

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

He was born on the Fourth of July, and as Garrett Bradley's dad likes to point out, the significance of that was mulled over a bit growing up.

"As he grew older with discussions of his birthday and the holiday, those two conversations would start to come together," Jim Bradley remembered. "He would ask what does that mean, and I said to him that's something for you to figure out."

Yesterday, as the younger Bradley was sworn in as the new state representative of the 3rd Plymouth district, comprised of Cohasset, Hull and his hometown of Hingham, he was cheered on by a contingent of family and friends. Bradley, a Democrat, won a three-way race in November for the honor of following Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, on Beacon Hill.

That Bradley would run for elected office didn't surprise the elder Bradley, though how hard he worked at it did.

"By the time he went to Boston College, the Jesuits had adopted the phrase, 'The ideal person is a man for others.' He decided at Boston College High that he wanted to be a man for others," he said. "He said if he was ever allowed to go to Boston College Law School and graduated, he would dedicate his life to public service. That flicker grew into a burning flame inside of him.

"It added an impetus not only to his desire but to his energy level that was unmatched."

Bradley said his son would get up at 5:30 a.m. go to bed at 11:30 p.m. and keep that schedule seven days a week for more than three years. "Even though I knew my son had a tremendous work ethic, I've never seen anything like this," he said.

Garrett Bradley

Heather Bradley, Garrett's wife, also knew early of his ambitions. "When I met Garrett in our first year of law school, he told me this was something he wanted to be," she said. "At the time he was working for [former state senator] Warren Tolman, so I knew this was something down the road he was really going to pursue, and I've really supported him the whole way."

Bradley ran in 1998 but was defeated by Murray. However he kept on campaigning throughout, even though it meant sacrificing some of his home time with Heather and their two-year old daughter Amanda. But Heather said his desire of his goal is what allowed her to be understanding. "It's such an important job," she said about the state representative position. "Public service is such a noble thing. I know he can do it.

"Obviously I'm extremely proud of him, as is Amanda. He has worked really hard for three years to get to this point, and I know starting [Wednesday] he's going to work really hard," she said. "He deserves it, and the people of this district deserve it and deserve to get a lot done."

She added jokingly, "I've seen him enough over the holidays, so I'm OK with him working hard."

Don't expect her to be twisting Bradley's arm behind-the-scenes, or influencing policy. "Garrett has his aide [Michael Salerno] and I'm bust with my own career and taking care of our daughter. And obviously we wouldn't be married if we didn't share the same beliefs," she said. "He knows what he is doing. He makes very educated decisions, and listens to people. He doesn't need my counsel."

She also said he already has begun to receive phone calls from constituents. "Our home line is published for people and he certainly gets it from other people. People have been calling the house since he was elected in November and is accessible to everyone," she said.

Both wife and father naturally are beyond happy for their new favorite state representative.

"I really believe Garrett's going to do a good job," said Heather.

"We as a family are extra proud of him," said Jim Bradley. "We think he's going to make a tremendously effective state rep. We think he has a very bright future."

Boatyard facelift planned

existing apartment space on its top-two levels, will be either taken down or moved to the west corner of the property, bordering Border Street, but will remain a three-story mixed use building with apartments on the upper two floors.

The Quonset hut, winch house and storage shed will all be taken down. A kayak rental and sales shop is proposed behind the Lobster Pound, partially on the area where the Quonset hut is now. Roy would also construct a kayak launch ramp behind the workshop. The existing wooden deck would be expanded to where the main building is now, and the railway system would be upgraded and repaired.

The filled-in land used for boat storage space, would be raised one and a half feet to become level with the rest of the property.

Pena said the project wouldn't increase the area of filled-in tidal lands. "We're hoping to minimize the environmental impact and open up the site, increase public access and increase public amenities," he told nearly a dozen citizens who turned out despite the chilly whether for the walkthrough.

The plan received initial support from boatyard business owner Frank Carey. He said the redesign and shuffling of buildings would provide him more storage room. He said he didn't support the prior owner's proposal in 1994 because it would have taken away storage space and cornered him into the property. This plan would "increase the size by quite a bit."

> "We're hoping to minimize the environmental impact and open up the site, increase public access and increase public amenities."
> — Carlos Penà, CLE Engineering

Pena said the entire first-floor of the new complex would be "water-dependent" usage.

Some citizens expressed concern about a lack of sufficient parking, sewer capabilities, and traffic issues. Pena said all those issues would be addressed during permitting discussions with the state and town. He also said the buildings would be consistent with the historical character of the existing ones.

In 1994, William Hanney bought the site, with the intent of constructing a residence on a majority of the property. He had begun the permit procedure with the state and had filed an environmental notification form. The proposal then went through a 20-day public comment period and the state decided not to request any more environmental reviews.

Roy, who bought the property in 1999, and CLE decided rather than go through the environmental notification procedure again, to simply file for a project change notice.

Now, said Shepardson, the public is able to again make comments until Jan. 12. A decision to require further environmental study will be made by the state Jan. 22. If no further studies are needed, the project can begin the normal permitting process.

Stephanie Landry, told Murray that she had packed up 38 boxes of papers and reports and letters.

"Thirty-eight?" Murray asked incredulously. "Well I'm a saver anyway. I still want to go through a lot of it before I throw it out."

The career

"I never had any intention of entering politics," she said. "My husband [Phil] talked me into running for selectman. When [the state representative] stepped down in 1976 he told me I'd be a great state rep."

She mulled it over and ran and won, despite maintaining her status as a town selectman. "A lot of people said they wouldn't vote for me unless I remained a selectman," she said. "But you really can't do both and do a good job."

Murray has come full-circle and once again said she is "seriously considering" running this spring for a spot on the board of selectmen again.

Since being elected initially in 1976, she has found a home in the Committee on Local Affairs, sitting in the same spot where she sat as a freshmen representative beside another young Republican, Paul Cellucci of Hudson. Local affairs is where bills on things such as town zoning bylaws, land transfers, home-rule petitions, and other town and city issues come for approval. Though not the highest ranking member of the committee, Murray has plenty of experience and knowledge to make up for it.

She was instrumental in getting a law allowing harbormasters to arrest people for driving boats while drunk, and making sure magazines with perfume samples have the scents enclosed in a pouch to prevent respiratory attacks on asthmatics. She also used a Hingham battle over whether the Town Treasurer position should be appointed or elected to pass a bill requiring such an issue to be settled through a referendum vote, not at a Town Meeting.

"Most people that vote don't go to Town Meeting," she explained.

She is also proud of her work on harbor dredging money for Cohasset, Hingham and Hull, and securing funds providing group homes for mentally disabled adults.

Her work over the past 24 years has resulted in numerous awards recently, including those from the state Harbormasters Association, Disabled American Veterans, American Legion, Saltwater Club in Hull and a Life Membership to the Marine Corps League. "That's the highest award you can get," she said of the Marine Corps honor.

"I said to Stephanie today, 'I don't know why everybody likes me, but I hope I keep on doing whatever I'm doing," she said.

Murray said until recently, she never had considered not running again, except once in 1988.

"After the '88 election, Phil said maybe it was time I stepped down," she remembered. "So we talked about it, and I said OK if we can do some traveling."

But Murray didn't step down. Phil, who used to spend so much time in her office he was called her "unpaid aide" died in December of 1989.

"I just figured it was best for me to just keep going."

What's next

When asked what she was going to do on her first day of not being a state representative, she immediately teared up at the thought.

"Speaker [Thomas] Finneran asked me that too, what am I going to do tomorrow," she said, tissue in hand. "And I don't know."

She said maybe she'll turn the television on inside her Margin Street home. "If that gets too much I'll put on my hat and coat and go for a walk. Every time I get in my car for a while, I'm going to think I'm going to pick Stephanie up."

Murray said so far she hasn't asked anyone for a job or position somewhere but insisted "I'll be doing something."

One thing she hopes to do is write a letter to all the new freshmen representatives and offer her assistance, as she has for years. The other thing is to keep an eye on the new kid in town, Bradley.

"I said to him for the first year he should be in the chamber for every session," she said. "I also warned Garrett that if he doesn't treat the people well, I will be back.

"And I will."

Village workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the third in a series of four community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village on Tuesday, Jan. 23, at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers Residence.

The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will give a presentation on various design alternatives for such items as new sidewalks, better parking, improved vehicle and pedestrian access, and associated streetscape design alternatives such as decorative lighting, plantings and street furniture. Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm St., (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; Tuesday, from noon to 8 p.m.; and Saturday, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

True spirit of generosity

The generosity of our South Shore neighbors and friends continues to inspire and amaze us.

Their kindness was evident throughout our most recent Gifts of Hope campaign. Readers saw a need more than ever to help address homelessness on the South Shore and responded with checks in all amounts, big and small.

There was the $500 check and the ones made out for $300. And we had so many donations in the amount of $25 and $50. Big or small, each donation has made a huge dent in assisting the three charities who benefited from the Gifts of Hope — Carolina Hill shelter in Marshfield, the South Shore Friends of the Homeless and Fr. Bill's Place in Quincy.

As was the case last year, our first effort to help ease the homeless situation on the South Shore, checks came in in large quantities each day. We looked forward to the time when the mail arrived and we were able to add to the tally for each charity and quickly send out the checks so the funds could be put to immediate use. Throughout this campaign we were all reminded how fortunate we are, how quickly circumstances can change and people find themselves down on their luck.

We are grateful to the people at Carolina Hill, Fr. Bill's Place and the South Shore Friends for sharing with us the candid stories about how they came to confront homelessness. We know it was not easy for them to open up and retell their difficult circumstances. We admire them for making the effort so people can better understand the "crisis" we are facing.

And to those who donated, it is hard to put into words the gratitude of those who will benefit from the money. Thank you seems so inappropriate, especially when we read a card from one grandmother who offered her $25 contribution.

She told us how she was struggling right now and was living her with daughter and grandchildren in an apartment were rent was about to go about and things were getting tighter. Yet after reading the stories of some of the homeless people she said she realized she was one of the lucky ones and her problems seemed small in comparison. She reached out to help, at a time when she, too, is struggling.

There were so many letters offering hope and support. The generosity of our readers brought in even more money than last year for the three charities. In fact, at this time we are still receiving last-minute checks as part of the Gifts of Hope campaign.

And while many of us are getting back to our regular routines, it's important for us not to forget the problem of homelessness and more importantly, the people who find themselves in that plight. It seems every holiday season, efforts to raise money are turned up several notches. But the problems of homelessness and hunger don't go away once the decorations are taken off the Christmas tree.

It is a year-round struggle and perhaps, in some small way, the Gifts of Hope campaign will make it a bit easier.

And as Dorothy Newell, director of the South Shore Friends, reminded us at the close of last year's campaign, "possibly the greatest blessing has been that Gifts of Hope has given the homeless the face of mothers and fathers and children just like people we know. And now that we know them, we can never forget them!"

Citizen of Year

In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

The deadline for nominations for the 2000 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 5. Please see the nomination form on page 10. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

CHL corrections

TO THE EDITOR:

I wish to correct a mistake in the "Year in Review" article in the Dec. 28 edition, and in the Dec. 7 article "Both sides claim victory in latest CHL battle."

In the Dec. 30 article, under "December", you report erroneously that "Cohasset Conservation Commission rules it does have jurisdiction over CHL, but refuses to take any action over reports of leachate seeping from the landfill."

In the Dec. 7 article, you report erroneously that the Conservation Commission, in response to a request from the Water Commission "refused to take any enforcement action against CHL, and instead decided to push for the completion of the capping process, as CHL owner Paul Barry wanted."

In fact, the Conservation Commission ruled that it does have jurisdiction over the leachate discharging from Cohasset Heights landfill into the watershed for Lily Pond, our public drinking water supply, and ordered CHL to submit a Notice of Intent within 90 days to describe what action CHL will take to address the problem. This was positive and forthright action by the Conservation Commission that they should be commended for taking.

The Conservation Commission did not "push for completion of the capping process," which is under the jurisdiction of the state Department of Environmental Protection and the Board of Health, but instead started the process to implement their own enforcement authority by requiring CHL to submit a plan, in a Notice of Intent, for stopping the seeping of leachate from the landfill. So, you see, the Conservation Commission did take action to stop the leachate discharge into our water supply.

Resolving to make holiday things

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I can only really speak for myself, of course, but I bet there are a few other people out there who, if they had it to do over again, would want to make, as in handcraft, holiday things next season.

Of the worlds I am grateful for, one of the greatest is being brought up in a family where the members used their hands — not only to paint and wallpaper, make peppermint-drop candies and scrumptious oatmeal bread, but also to make our own holiday greeting cards, some of our own presents, and the wrappings. I was a Depression child and a World War II kid, so it was both frugal necessity and patriotic to recycle, reuse, and reduce (our needs and consumption), and I developed an instinct for scrounging into a fine art (I'm quite intrigued by "found" jewelry made from metal roadside debris and "found" poetry made from words already out there in the ozone, or what's left of it) that evidently is pretty much a lost art now. I'm rather proud of my household appellation of "Bog Man." I think it's great fun to have your feet in different worlds.

So, have you ever tried splatter-printing your own greeting cards? Tremendous fun — anyone can do it; reuses bits of window screening and old toothbrushes; creates wonderful effects; or pota-to-printing your own wrapping paper? Far out! Keeps recipients guessing! They still sell linoleum blocks for block printing.

My 98-year-old mother, once a Camp Fire guardian who taught, amongst other things, beadwork (done on wooden cheese boxes with sections of door springs attached to the ends), still comes up with creative recycled/reused cards, one of her tricks for staying young.

On the other hand, as someone said recently, the dearest gifts are those handmade by children.

A Quaker friend included this item on her card this year: Send old greeting cards to St. Jude's Ranch for Children, 100 St. Jude's St., Boulder City, NV 89005.

Maybe next year ... Happy handmade holidays! See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is the publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Lights shine on Memory Tree

Commemorative lights will shine on the Memory Tree on the lawn of South Shore Community Center, as well as a star placed on the tree in the lobby with the name(s) of your loved one(s). As contributions were received, bulbs were illuminated throughout the season, and the names of the donors and those remembered were published in the Cohasset Mariner. Your tax-deductible contributions will helped continue quality programs at SSCC.

Teens charged with alcohol transport

Police arrested three Cohasset teenagers for possession of alcohol outside Mobil Mart at about 10:45 p.m. on New Year's Eve.

The teens were apparently headed to First Night in Boston, police said.

One of the teenagers, later identified as Adam G. Leahy, 18, of 4 Stevens Lane, was spotted behind Mobil Mart acting suspiciously. The teen hurried back to the vehicle operated by Margaret E. O'Connor, 17, of 55 Lantern Lane. The police officer subsequently conducting the inquiry discovered 27 cans of Bud Lite beer in a backpack along with an open can of beer in the vehicle. Also arrested was passenger Ronan S. Buick, 18, of 3 Highland Ave. The teens were arraigned on charges of minors transporting alcohol at Quincy District Court on Tuesday morning.

O'Connor and Buick were placed in a diversionary program during which they must attend a Mothers Against Driving Drunk workshop at Quincy District Court and pay a $50 fee to MADD. The arrests won't appear on their records, police prosecutor Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

The charge against Leahy was continued without a finding for three months. which means if Leahy stays out of trouble, the charge will be dismissed at that time. Leahy has to pay $85 in court costs, Jackson said.

Skippers lose first in Holiday Final

Cohasset falls to 4-1 with 69-50 loss to Scituate

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Annual Classic Tournament, hosted by Cohasset High School, ended with the Scituate Sailors pouncing on their host with a 69-50 victory in the championship game.

The Sailors connected on 24-of-49 field goals in the game, including 40% of their three pointers.

"Scituate played a great game," appraised Cohasset head coach Ron Ford, also pleased with the play of his squad. "Everybody contributed. I was happy with the effort."

For the Sailors, junior center Jessie McKinnell, the tournament's Most Valuable Player, tossed in 17 points, shooting a perfect 5-of-5 from the foul line, and grabbed a game high 14 rebounds. McKinnell, with his six foot three inch frame and long arms, was able to get free under the basket all game and convert shot after shot.

"His arms stretch out to Missouri," joked Sailor head coach Matt Poirier. "He's a great athlete."

"He has improved so much," chimed in Ford. "He has worked a lot on his game."

Sailor senior co-captain Chris Field dumped in 18 points, making shots from all over the floor.

"Every time they needed a big shot, he hit it," noted Ford.

For the second year in a row, senior tri-captain TJ Bilodeau was named Cohasset's Tournament All-Star, with 24 points and four steals in both games. He hit 10 out of his 11 free throws in the tournament.

"He has become Mr. Holiday," laughed Ford. "I was thrilled with the way he played."

With junior point guard Matt Bilodeau in Florida for a soccer tournament, senior tri-captain Doug O'Brien stepped into the role. Ford has already said this season that he feels confident playing his six-foot-one swingman at any position on the floor.

"That is such a huge weapon for us," said Ford, who likes to create mismatches with O'Brien and smaller opposing guards. "If it wasn't for Douggie, we would have lost that game by 40."

Oddly enough, the Skippers ended up using seven different point guards in the game for at least one possession, including O'Brien, senior tri-captains Bilodeau and Erik Shea, juniors Kyle Weber and Pete Maitland, sophomore Jared Krupczak and freshman Chris Bilodeau.

"We had a lot of guys that can bring the ball up," explained Ford.

And while Cohasset took advantage of its depth, coach Poirier had his team working in two separate shifts. Subs would not come in one or two at a time, but in entire units.

In one of the shifts, twins Josh and Jason Hulme gave the Sailors a great lift off the bench.

"They are awesome," effused Poirier. "They really make things happen."

With a 40-23 halftime lead, and the game seemingly out of reach, the Skippers started to claw their way back into the game, pulling to 57-47 with just under five minutes left in the game. And though the score never got closer than that, Poirier was impressed with the overall determination of the Skippers.

"[Ford's] kids played hard," he said. "He can't be upset with that performance."

Ford was not pleased about tallying his first loss of the season, but chalked it up to a learning experience.

Cohasset's T.J. Bilodeau (#32) goes past Scituate's Mike Barry for the shot in Friday's championship game of the Cohasset Holiday Tourney. Scituate won the game, 69-50, handing the host Skippers their first loss of the season.

"You can learn more from a loss than a win," explained Ford. "This was our first real test."

In the first round of the tournament, the Skippers were able to jump on the visiting Raiders from Dover-Sherborn, winning handily, 86-61.

Cohasset's full court zone trap proved to be very effective against the Raiders, as the Skippers were able to force 17 turnovers, while only committing seven.

Cohasset hit on 16 out of 20 foul shots, including their last seven in a row. The team is shooting over 80% for the year.

Weber and Chris Bilodeau recorded their first varsity points. Sophomore Ian Kidder had his most prolific scoring output of the year with nine points on 3-of-5 shooting from the floor.

Girls continue quest for first win

Young hoopsters stay upbeat despite rough start

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

At 0-6, the girls varsity basketball team may not be the envy of the league quite yet, but second year coach Ellen Carr is optimistic about the future of the program.

"I hope this will be our learning year," reported Carr, who manages to stay buoyant in the face of her team's record.

Playing a junior varsity schedule last year, the Lady Skippers finished 10-8. With the option of taking another year at the JV level, Carr opted instead to challenge her squad with a varsity slate in 2000-'01.

"The varsity level is physically much more demanding," she explained. "It is much rougher under the boards."

Only two players have been added to this year's squad, and the starting lineup features four sophomores and a freshman.

The one freshman, Danielle Pinkus, was the only freshman who made the varsity team, and she has stepped into the role as the starting center.

"She makes very few mistakes," appraised Carr of her young center. "I am quite delighted with her progress and willingness."

The only other acquisition was junior Jessica Stevermer, who also has impressed Carr with her adaptation to varsity play.

"Jessica is learning very fast," stated Carr.

In the team's most recent games, Cardinal Spellman defeated the Lady Skippers twice over vacation.

"They were definitely stronger and bigger," noted Carr, who has one of the smaller teams on the South Shore. "They play very tough."

In the first game, Cardinal Spellman won 61-33, with sophomore small forward Lindsay Grossman the only double digit scorer for Cohasset with 13 points.

"I think we were a little shell-shocked," said Carr of the team's performance. "And while the score does not reflect it, we played them much better the second time."

The final score of the Friday showdown was 56-35, with Grossman tallying 18 points, and sophomore shooting guard Heather Peraino adding 13.

In the girls' last league match-up, a contest in Norton, the Skippers lost 53-35. Peraino tossed down 16 points, while sophomore point guard LaRaine Langford netted 10.

Transition play dominated in all three of those contests, disrupting Cohasset's original intent in running more set plays.

"We have not run our half court offense as much as we would like," admitted Carr.

Also playing well for Cohasset in all three games off the bench was the only senior of the squad, co-captain Katie Wenmark.

"Katie is a terrific team player," Carr said, as she has put Wenmark at all five positions on the floor at points during the game.

The other captain of the team, sophomore power forward Maura O'Brien, has made up for her lack of height with excellent timing under the boards.

"Maura is a wonderful leaper," effused Carr earlier this year.

Great turnout for 2nd annual alumni game

On Sunday, January 1, the Cohasset Hockey Boosters sponsored the Second Annual "Alumni Varsity Hockey Game" at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham. The tradition of an Alumni Game on New Year's Day is one that existed in the80's, but had eventually just stopped happening.

Two years ago, after a discussion with Clark Chatterton, the late AD of the Cohasset Middle-High School, when he reminisced about the old Alumni Game, the Hockey Boosters decided to try to re-institute the Alumni Game on New Year's day and see what happened.

Hockey Booster Jo-Ann Pilczak stated that "We were pleasantly surprised with the turnout of over 30 alumni players at last yer's Alumni Game. Adding our current Varsity Team to that number, we had over 50 players and found that we needed to run two separate games to accommodate the numbers. The players were obviously very excited about an Alumni Game."

"We planned the event for them and they readily came," Hockey Booster Ann Rasmussen added. "We were also overwhelmed by the response from the public. We had over 200 spectators last year. It was a great evening for skaters and spectators!"

There was another reason for re-instituting the Alumni Game, according to Pilczak: "Two seasons ago, the hockey team desperately needed new game shirts. Until that time, the Hockey Boosters had been a rather small, informal group and, we decided it was time for the Boosters to make a commitment to becoming a strong, active group of supporters for the Varsity Ice Hockey Team.

"We had very little time to raise money once we made this decision," continued Pilczak, "so we reached out to the Alumni skaters for donations to the team."

The result was an overwhelming response in donations from the Alumni players.

"We bought the shirts for the team and we were off and running," added Rasmussen.

The Hockey Boosters have continued fundraising in various ways, including this year's First Annual Holiday Raffle run during the month of December, and the alumni have continued their donations to the

Hockey team falls to 2-3 as scrappy comeback falls short

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The youthful Cohasset hockey team is off to a 2-3 start, and their prospects weren't expected to improve with Wednesday's match-up against defending Division 3 state champions Hanover.

The biggest challenge for veteran coach Dennis Walsh in the early going, he concedes, will be keeping his young squad focussed. He feels he has plenty of talent to work with, but realizes there may be struggles early on, the likes of which often cause a shaking of confidence.

"I definitely think this team is going to be a lot better at the end of the year than they are right now," offered Walsh, a veteran of 32 seasons walking hockey benches. "From what I've seen, I don't think this team is the type to dwell on the negative. I think they're going to keep moving ahead with every game, but it's something that you keep an eye on as a coach."

Walsh feels that last Wednesday's heartbreaking 6-5 loss to Scituate was a good testament to his team's character. The Skippers fell behind early, and saw that deficit grow to 5-2 by the end of the second period. However, his troops knotted things up at five with three scrappy, workmanlike goals in the final frame before finally surrendering the gamewinner with under two minutes remaining.

"I thought we showed a lot in battling back like we did against a tough team" said Walsh. "We kept the puck in their end of the ice for most of the last two periods, and we had a few chances to win it ourselves. I think these players showed themselves what they're capable of when the going gets tough."

Sophomore Greg O'Connell scored twice in the game for the Skippers and fellow soph Tom Anderson added a goal and an assist.

Walsh figures his troops would be a lot better off if they could start a few games with the same intensity with which they seem to the end them.

Carbone takes fifth at Marshfield

Pat Carbone was Cohasset's top individual performer at the Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tournament last week, with a fifth place finish in the 145-pound division in the 22-team field.

Carbone got knocked out of the winner's bracket by number 1 seed Matt Greener, from Walpole, in the last seconds of the semi-final match, 4-2. He went on to split two consolation matches to earn get fifth place honors.

The Cohasset squad finished 20th overall in the top drawing annual tourney.

The wrestling team stands at 4-4. The Skippers will next wrestle in the very competitive Whitman-Hanson Tourney this Saturday, Jan. 6.

The next dual meet will be Wednesday, Jan. 10, at 7 p.m. versus league front runner Rockland. This will be followed by a quad meet at Cohasset on Friday, Jan. 12 (Sharon, Duxbury, New Bedford).

Wrestling Alumnus updates

Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney reports that a number of alumni have been stopping by to help out during the vacation.

Kevin Duffy (class of '97) worked out with the CHS squad before Christmas to prepare for the Florida Duals meet competition. Duffy is the senior captain of the U.S. Coast Guard Academy's wrestling team. He was an all-state champion and New England finalist for Cohasset before moving on to the Coast Guard. He placed fifth in the College New England's as a sophomore and is currently ranked number 2 in his [illegible].

Mike Baird ('99), a three-time state place winner for CHS, came up to show his former teammates a few tricks. Baird is also attending the Coast Guard Academy and has wrestled in a number of tournaments. Ironically, he is currently Kevin Duffy's back up.

"We've been starting slow for some reason, and then been forced into a comeback mode," assessed the coach. "It would be nice to see us play with a lead a little more of the time."

And he figures that Wednesday's showdown with Hanover would be a perfect place to start.

"The kids know they've got to come out flying right from the start in that one or they could be in deep trouble real quick, and Hanover's not the type of team you come back on," noted Walsh. "If we can ever get an early edge on them, there's no telling how far that would go to helping our overall confidence."

'99 came by to roll around as well. Mike Rossi, former state champ, is now attending Quinnipiac College and former teammates Ben Littauer (fifth, states) and Justin Golden (third, states) both are now attending Harvard University. J.P. Laugelle stopped by but was unable to wrestle due to knee surgery. Laugelle is now attending Merrimack College.

Ray Jones ('93) was the biggest surprise. Jones looked great at 190 pounds, according to coach Sweeney ("all muscle", he reported). Still, this was a far cry from the 152 pounds he wrestled at for CHS, when he was a New England finalist. He went on to Trinity College where he set football and track records. Jones also was a New England College Wrestling champion as freshmen. He went on to earn All-American wrestling honors as a junior and senior at Trinity. He spent a year at Hamilton coaching football, and a year at Williams coaching all three sports. Jones is currently a graduate assistant coaching football and track at Redlands University in California. He is pursuing an education masters.

Nathan Foire ('93), a former state champ for Cohasset, went on to WPI, where he twice placed in the College New England's. Foire was 14-1 (ranked number 1 in New England) in his senior year before a concussion ended his wrestling career. He is currently a graduate assistant coaching at WPI. Foire is also working full time while living in Worcester.

Scituate, on the other hand, did not have such an easy time in the opening round, sneaking by Avon 70-62.

Avon came out of the gate on the gallop, making quick outlets that translated into easy fast break buckets to open up with a 15-3 lead.

"They really transition well," said Poirier. "But once we figured it out, we attacked them. That is a team that has beaten us rather easily in the past."

Behind McKinnell's 18 points and nine rebounds, and 14 points apiece from Mike Barry and Joel Racicot, who was named a Tournament All-Star for his efforts over the course of the two days, the Sailors went on to win.

Poirier, in his first year as a varsity coach for Scituate, won the tournament as a player for Scituate High School in 1983. And while it was nice for him to get the plaque again in 2000, Poirier knows he needs to focus on the very tough Patriot League for the rest of the year.

Poirier mentioned how wide open the league is this year, with the perennially powerful Rockland squad and very strong teams coming from East Bridgewater and Randolph.

"Anybody in that league can beat anybody on any given night," he reported. "But ultimately, everything we do is in preparation for Rockland."

Poirier also mentioned how he would like to thank Ron Ford and Austin Lang of Goodsport for "doing a great job hosting the tournament."

Tournament Game Notes

-Scituate made nine of its first 10 foul shots, then one of its next six.

-TJ Bilodeau has recorded at least three steals in all five Skipper contests this year.

-Dover-Sherborn scored 15 fast break points against Cohasset, six against Avon.

–The championship game with Scituate marked the first time this season the Skippers shot under 75 percent from the foul line, and the dropoff was precipitous. They converted on just 47 percent of their attempts from the charity stripe.

-Scituate made 8 out of its last 11 field goal attempts versus Cohasset.

Cohasset Soccer Club registration

Spring travel:

Final registrations for the Spring Coastal League program (fifth and12th grades) are due by Jan. 15. We are not allowed to register players after this date. The fifth and sixth graders who played for the Cohasset Soccer Club in the fall do not have to register. Forms can be picked-up at the recreation department. The cost is $60. Please contact the League Representative Brad Murray at 383-7017 for questions regarding the Coastal League. Games will begin on Saturday, March 31.

Indoor Soccer Program:

We are currently registering the first through sixth grade boys and girls for our indoor program at the Osgood Gym. The times are 12-7 on Sundays. There is a 30 minute skills session with a professional coach followed by a 45-minute game. We are limited to 15 players per age group. There is some space available in all groups. The program will be 10 Sundays January through March omitting the February vacation weeks. The cost is $75. The forms can be picked up at the recreation Department. Call Wallace St. John 383-2552 for questions.

Boosters. Such support allowed the Boosters to hire Igor Gratchev, a former member of the Russian Red Army Elite Hockey Team, to run a clinic for the Varsity Team at the start of this year's season.

"This clinic was a very worthwhile experience for the boys," stated Coach Dennis Walsh, "and it gave us some new ideas for drills we can start using in our own practices."

The support continues in other ways as well. Peter Sandblom (class of '88) has been attending the Skippers' 5 am practices to work with goalies Dan Kinchla and Jeremy Tedeschi. Once again this year, an anonymous alumnus offered to pay the Alumni Game registration fee for all alums who are currently college students.

"The one thing I've learned from my experiences with the alumni players is that hockey players are very loyal and devoted, not only to their sport but to their teams," noted Pilczak. "Planning this game over the past six months is our way of showing our gratitude to the alumni for their loyalty to and support of the Skippers."

This year's game was dedicated to the memory of Clark Chatterton, former Athletic Director for the Cohasset Middle-High School. After a moment of silence and the playing of the National Anthem, the first of two hockey games began!

Helping out with this event, Middle School Social Studies teacher/varsity football coach Tony Rolfe acted as announcer during the games. Cohasset parents, Chuck Peterson and Bill Devine (father of current freshman defenseman Mike Devine) were referees for both games. Varsity Coach Dennis Walsh and Assistant Coach Benjamin Watson coached both benches during the games.

The 150+ spectators had a great time watching the two games. Among the spectators was Clark Chatteron's wife Sallyanne and children. Many alumni player parents were in the stands taking in the opportunity to once again watch their sons play hockey and to reminisce about all those cold hours spend in hockey rinks.

Elaine Curran of Cohasset attended the games to watch sons two of her four alumni player sons, Tim ('84) and Sean ('82), participate in this year's game.

"Tim came all the way from California, dragging along all his hockey equipment on his flight," laughed Curran.

The final results of the games? In a close game from start to finish, the first game ended in a 5-5 tie between the first Alumni team and the Varsity players.

Playing their second game of the afternoon, the Varsity players were defeated 8-4 by the second group of Alumni players.

After the games, the Boosters hosted a reception of light refreshments provided by the Varsity parents to give alumni an opportunity to relax and catch up with each other since last year's game. All participants in the Alumni Game received a souvenir tee-shirt.

To add to the afternoon, Michael and Rosemary O'Connell donated Bruins tickets for a raffle. The lucky winner, Chuck Peterson, will be at the Fleet Center on February 27 to see the Bruins face-off against the Phoenix Coyotes.

Hockey Boosters Jo-Ann Pilczak, Ann Rasmussen, Chris Straughn, Shelanne Durkin and Trish Morse expressed sincere thanks to the alumni for their continued support of the Skippers Ice Hockey Team and, to all the local merchants and friends of Cohasset Hockey who have supported the efforts of the Varsity Team and the Boosters. The Boosters hope to see everyone on January 1, 2002!

belt, stands at 1-4, with two of the losses coming to Spellman's Junior Varsity squad.

Of course, the always upbeat Carr insists that she has seen some tremendous improvement already in the short weeks of the season.

Gillian Weber, who earlier this school year completed her first season on the varsity soccer squad, has run the offense at the point guard position.

"She has a lot of hustle, and she makes things happen," said Carr.

The other two names Carr mentioned for standing out on the freshman squad were Ashley Faber and Libby Meikleham, as this duo has provided some much needed height on this "vertically challenged" team.

To borrow a cliché the Red Sox seem to have fallen back on every October since 1918: "we'll get 'em next year."

Adopting pets the easy way

Petfinder.com sets the cyber trend in buying furry friends

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Here's a good new year's resolution—resolve to adopt an abandoned animal in 2001, whether it be a dog, a cat, or a lizard for that matter.

The relatively new international website known as Petfinder.com is giving animal shelters around the country and around the world the chance to post unwanted animals on the web.

At the same time, Petfinder.com is giving people who need a pet the chance to get exactly the right one for them by looking through Petfinder's vast cyber-selection of animals and shelters.

"The website is better than sliced bread," said David Curtin, director of the Althea Griffin Animal Rescue Shelter in Weymouth. "We've had excellent success with it. We've only had to kill one dog in the last three years, and believe it or not, that's a big improvement."

He added "Because of Petfinder, we've placed dogs in new homes in places like New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont, and New Jersey. Every dog that we've put up for adoption on Petfinder is now gone. It's the best thing that's come down the pike in a long time."

Curtin said using Petfinder is an easy process for any shelter—just call and sign up. In turn, Petfinder.com creates a link to a given shelter's web page, thereby advertising all the animals which are up for adoption at that particular shelter.

"One of our dogs even got placed in New Mexico," Curtin added. "I'd say we now have a 99.5 percent success rate in terms of getting animals adopted. It's crazy not do to it. It's such a good program."

"Petfinder sends a progress report every week," said Doris Baker, the interim rescue coordinator at the Boston Terrier Tea Party (shelter) in Hanson. "The report tells us how many people have found our web page through Petfinder."

Baker said because of Petfinder, her Hanson-based website has received hundreds and hundreds of visits over the past four weeks.

"It's definitely worth it for any shelter," she added. "Hopefully, with this kind of thing, we're putting a dent in the euthanasia rate (for animals). We're very happy with it."

"I get an average of 200-250 on my website a week," said Duxbury animal control officer Haley Parlin. "Since we joined up with Petfinder.com, we've seen a 100 percent adoption rate. One dog even went all the way to Nova Scotia, but most of our adoptions are in the New England area."

She added "The bottom line is that everyone uses the Internet and Petfinder just works. It's better than a pet store."

One would think the people behind such a web page would have to be major computer gurus, but that's not the case. The site was started in 1996 by the husband and wife team of Jared and Betsy Saul, from New Jersey.

"Jared and I were in New Jersey driving to meet friends for dinner in 1995," Betsy Saul said. "On the way, Jared and I kept brainstorming what the perfect web site would be like. Keep in mind that in 1995, web pages weren't as extravagant as they are now."

Betsy and Jared decided at the time that the perfect website would be interactive, searchable, and would mimic the format of real estate web pages.

"I've always loved animals," Betsy added, "and Jared and both decided at the same instant that the perfect website would involve abandoned pets and animal shelters. By the time we arrived at the restaurant we both said 'We have to do this…it'll be a lot of work but we have to do this.'"

The Sauls got right to work, and the website was launched in January 1996. They enlisted friends for help in order to contact all the animal shelters in New Jersey to let them know of the new web page.

"After the first year, we had 80 shelters listed on the site," Betsy

The one stop 'Softub' shop

East Weymouth businessmen launches new wave of hot tubs…and they deliver

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

What better way to celebrate the new year than with a brand new hot tub?

And now, ordering a hot tub on the South Shore is as easy as ordering a pizza—you can even get it delivered to your front door.

The new East Weymouth-based business called Hot Tubs To Go specializes in renting and selling "Softubs" which are essentially portable hot tubs made out of a flexible foam and special vinyl. Each of the Softubs weighs between 65 and 73 pounds..

CHris Martin and Bob Piazza showing off a "Softtub".

"A lot of people want to try these things out," said Hot Tubs To Go co-founder Chris Martin, of Hanover. "We've sold three or four of them already."

The business is only in its fourth week— it is operated out of Piazza's Weymouth salon called Mr. Robert's Hair Salon and Tanning.

The business itself was the brainchild of Martin, his wife Deb, and Bob Piazza, of Weymouth. Piazza takes most of the calls, Deb takes care of the bookings, and Martin does the hot tub deliveries.

And so far, business is pretty good.

"Every customer who has tried one has been satisfied," Piazza said. He noted more and more calls keep coming in every day. He said all of his regular haircut customers also keep coming in and asking about the tubs.

"A lot of people call and ask for more information on them" Deb added. "They want to get an idea on how they can rent them, or how they can buy them."

Martin explained people can rent the hot tubs for $225-$300 per week. He said the business sells the tubs as well—they cost between $2,595-$3,695.

"If someone rents one for a week, and decides that they like it, we'll take the amount that person already paid in rent off the selling price," Martin said. "People are falling in love with them when they rent (the tubs). Some of them are telling us they never slept better in their lives."

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3

An Aries moon continues to set a quick pace. Sidestep impatience, irritability. Use common sense. Channel high energy constructively. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion; finish old business, handle routine matters. New starts are off limits, because the Aries moon becomes inactive at 5:09 a.m. for the remainder of the day. The planet Venus moves into Pisces at 1:14 p.m., remaining there until February 2.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4

The moon enters Taurus at 1:57 a.m., traveling there today and tomorrow. However, today's influences are very different in comparison to tomorrow. Today the moon forms challenging alignments to Neptune in the morning and Mars in the afternoon. In addition, Venus, the planetary ruler of Taurus, prepares to form a 90-degree contact to Jupiter. Don't take on more than you can handle. Move cautiously in business or romance. Avoid doing anything on impulse. Postpone taking action until tomorrow afternoon.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 5

The Taurus moon interacts with Uranus making for a topsy-turvy morning. Be flexible; go with the flow. Influences turn around completely this afternoon, however, making it one of the best for new beginnings. Plan to sign contracts, make important decisions, launch new enterprises between 12:37-5:38 p.m., when the Taurus moon aligns with Mercury. At 9:09 p.m. the moon interacts with Saturn and becomes inactive.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6

Planetary influences continue to rate high for new starts in your business or personal life. Pull out all the stops. The moon enters versatile Gemini at 6:44 a.m. Mercury, Gemini's planetary ruler, forms a harmonious contact to Saturn at 10:46 p.m. This influence is ideal for making practical, realistic decisions or for signing important documents. All communications are highlighted; participate in group discussions, share ideas. Send letters, packages, faxes, emails.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 7

The combination of a Gemini moon and full moon buildup makes for an upbeat social day. It is okay to initiate new activities before 2:19 p.m., when the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. However, this day is ideal for fun and games. Gather with friends and enjoy life to the fullest.

MONDAY, JANUARY 8

The final windup to this month's full moon begins at 8:09 a.m., when the moon enters the emotional sign Cancer. Others may be hypersensitive, moody, depressed. Choose your words carefully. Think before you act. Take extra time out for yourself; pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain a positive attitude. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. Stay busy with practical projects; you can be most productive. Plan a quiet evening. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain deep, penetrating insights.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 9

Potentially stormy astrological weather continues. Resolve to maintain a calm, peaceful demeanor. Take it slow and easy. Focus on work projects; handle routine chores and errands, clean and reorganize. The full moon/lunar eclipse culminates at 3:24 p.m., 20-degrees of the sign Cancer. Stressful influences will ease up considerably in the evening, because the moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn at 10:41 p.m. Get extra rest tonight.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10

Gear up for an exciting, upbeat day. The Cancer moon becomes inactive at 7:39 a.m. until 7:44 a.m., when it enters playful Leo. The planet Mercury moves into Aquarius at 8:26 a.m., remaining there until February 1. The planet Jupiter now stands at 1-degree Gemini, and the applying Mercury/Jupiter alignment generates an optimistic mood. It makes this day ideal for launching new ventures, and it highlights all communications, study, travel. Go for the gold.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11

The combination of a Leo moon and Mercury/Jupiter alignment prompts you to get an early start to this day. You can be most productive this morning. Plan to finish projects already begun rather than starting new ones. A lunar opposition to Uranus may bring unexpected distractions, obstacles in the afternoon. At 10:08 p.m. the moon forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Saturn and becomes inactive. Meditate for inner peace and clarity.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12

The moon enters Virgo at 7:26 a.m., traveling there today and tomorrow. In this period, Mercury, Virgo's planetary ruler, aligns with Neptune. This influence is ideal for developing creative projects. Follow your intuition and imagination. On the other hand, this is not a favorable time for making long-term decisions or commitments. You may not have all the facts of the matter.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13

A lunar alignment to Pluto may spark emotional fireworks this morning. Don't rock the boat. As the day goes on, potentially stressful influences ease up considerably. All creative endeavors get the green light; art, music, dance, photography, crafts. Mercury and Neptune align at 5-degrees of Aquarius at 8:10 p.m. The Virgo moon aligns with the sun and Saturn until 11:12 p.m., when it becomes inactive. In addition, the sun forms a harmonious contact to Saturn in the early morning hours. Plan a quiet evening; spend quality time with friends and loved ones.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 14

The moon enters social Libra at 9:05 a.m. and forms harmonious contacts to Jupiter, Neptune and Mercury. Visit or entertain friends; get in touch with people you haven't heard from in a while. This day rates high for new starts of all kinds.

MONDAY, JANUARY 15

A Libra moon continues to place the focus on relationship/partnership issues. The green light remains on for new beginnings, particularly in your personal life. If you have been experiencing problems with another, now is the time to work out difficulties. Be willing to see their point of view; forgive, forget and start anew. Channel your passions and dynamic energies into creative or romantic outlets.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 16

It may be difficult to get back to your daily business routine. Allow extra time to get where you are going. At 7:35 a.m. the last quarter phase of the moon occurs, and the Libra moon becomes inactive. Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, prepares to form major alignments to Pluto and Mars. Don't take risks. Secret schemes or hidden agendas will most likely backfire. At 2:02 p.m. the moon enters intensive Scorpio. Stay busy with work projects; review, redo, repair, reorganize. Back off rather than stir up resentment.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17

A Scorpio moon today and tomorrow may generate stormy emotional weather. Don't force issues. Keep a low profile. On the other hand, the Scorpio moon brings a time when you can be most productive and get big work projects out of the way. Take on a busy schedule. Today the moon aligns with Mercury at 11:55 a.m., Mars at 5:20 p.m. and Venus at 5:53 p.m. Plan a quiet evening. Look within, and you will find what you need to get back on track.

Food & dining

Frittering away your fruit

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A fruit fritter is simply fruit coated with a simple batter and fried. The batter takes just a couple of minutes to prepare and, although oil does have to be heated, the result is more than worth the effort: a crispy, crunchy exterior with a warm, fresh filling bursting with brightly flavored juices. The problem? Every recipe I tried stayed crispy for only 30 seconds or so. I also found the fruit inside almost always became mushy and unappealing after frying in the hot oil. So the goal was to develop a stay-crisp fritter with lively, perfectly cooked fruit.

There are three approaches to fritters. Batters can be made with whipped egg whites, with beer or wine or with egg yolks, similar to a French choux paste, the eggy dough used to make éclairs. When tested, the first two batters were very foamy and light, but after they were fried, they immediately became soggy and horrible. The choux paste approach produced fritters that were shiny and puffy, much like third-rate chicken fingers. I also discovered that the use of milk in the batter resulted in a coating that became soggy.

I went back to the drawing board and decided to start with a simple batter made from equal parts flour and water. This produced a tough, cardboard casing. Next, I tried using a bit of salt, sugar and butter worked into the flour to make the coating more flavorful and tender. The flavor improved, but the texture was still tough. I finally hit upon the solution when I added baking powder. This gave the fritters a light crispy texture, which remained even after they had been on a rack for several minutes. The addition of lemon juice brightened the flavor a bit. As a final test, I substituted 1/2 cup of milk for the same amount of water and, once again, found that the fritters turned out soft rather than crispy.

Finally, the oil temperature turned out to be critical. All of the recipes I found suggested 350 degrees as the ideal temperature, but the fritters always turned out soggy. I then tried much higher temperatures and settled on 390 degrees, and the fritters were perfect: The outside was crisp, and the fruit inside was cooked but not soggy.

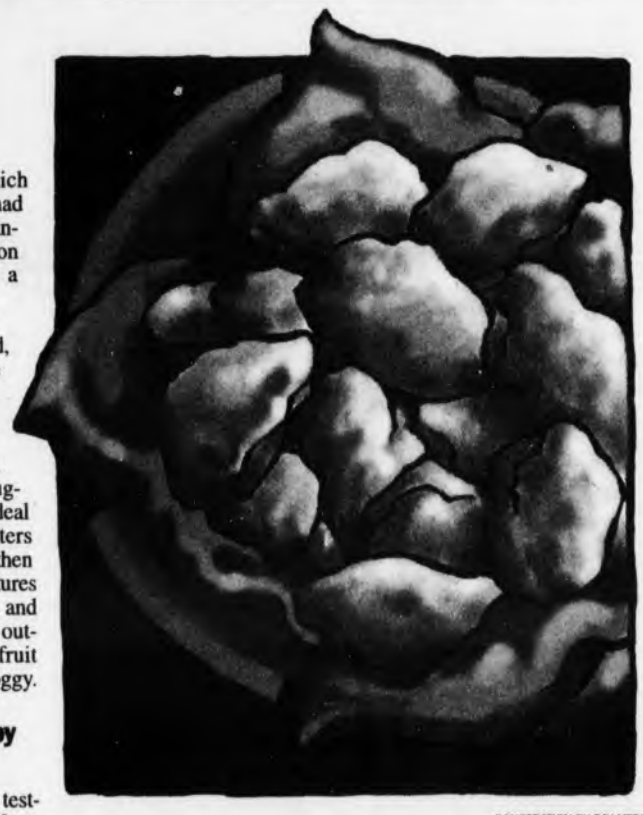

ILLUSTRATION BY RAY MEDICI

Master recipe for crispy fruit fritters

Unlike the other recipes I tested, these fritters stay crispy for a few minutes after frying. Be sure to use very hot oil, about 390 degrees; otherwise, the fritters will quickly turn soggy. For the ideal fritter, the oil should be hot enough so that the fritters cook in just one minute. It is best to serve these fritters as soon as they are cool enough to eat, about 5 minutes after frying.

1 quart canola oil
1 cup all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon butter at room temperature
1 cup water
1 teaspoon lemon juice
5 cups bananas, apples or pineapples cut into 1/2-inch slices
Confectioners' sugar or granulated sugar for sprinkling or rolling

1. Heat the oil in a large heavy pot (cast iron preferred) over medium heat for about 7 minutes, or until it reaches 390 degrees on a candy thermometer. (If you do not have a candy thermometer, you can experiment with one fritter at a time until the fritter cooks to a dark golden brown in 60 seconds.) Have a cooling rack set into a jelly roll pan near the pot of oil.

2. Place the flour, sugar, baking powder and salt in a medium bowl and stir to combine. Add the butter, and rub it into the flour mixture until it is fully combined and no traces of butter remain. Combine the water and lemon juice and add to the flour mixture. Whisk to a smooth batter.

3. Place 4 pieces of fruit at a time into the batter. Turn with a fork to be sure all sides are coated and then using the fork add them, one at a time, to the hot oil. They should immediately bubble wildly and start to brown. After 30 seconds or so, turn them over. If they will not turn (sometimes an air pocket prevents them from turning over), use a spoon to carefully baste the top of the fritters to ensure even browning. Cook each fritter until it is a rich golden brown, and then remove with a slotted spoon onto the cooling rack. Let cool for about 5 minutes before serving. Repeat with the remaining fruit. Sprinkle with confectioners' sugar, or roll in granulated sugar if desired. Serves 8.

Adopting pets the easy way

said. "Shelters who joined up with us started telling us their animal adoption rates were doubling, even tripling."

Since then, the success of the site has skyrocketed. The website has two main offices—one in New Jersey, and one in Arizona, where the Sauls now reside.

"Many shelters who are now on the site are getting really excited because their euthanasia rates are decreasing rapidly," Betsy said. "Unfortunately, euthanasia will always exist because there will always be sick animals who need to be put down. But the problem of putting perfectly adoptable pets to sleep is becoming less of an epidemic."

She added "And we have all kinds of animals listed—dogs, cats, reptiles, and pigs. The thing about Petfinder.com is that it's not as depressing as going into a shelter or a pet store."

Betsy said currently, the Petfinder.com site gets about 300,000 visitors per month and according to her, it's only going to get bigger because the site will soon be available in Europe. Furthermore, the Sauls have teamed up with animal organizations like American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the Ralston Purina Company.

"Back when we started this whole thing we figured it would make a difference," Betsy said. "And if you can make a difference, there's no reason not to."

Martin said the idea for the business came to him when he and Deb were on vacation in Vermont a couple of years ago.

"When we were there, there was one night it got pretty chilly," Martin said. "We found an add in the paper about hot tub rentals, so we went ahead and rented one. We've loved them ever since." Now, Martin actually owns one.

"(Piazza) and I have been friends for more than 20 years," Martin added. "He's actually been cutting my hair since I was 12 years old. When I got back that time from Vermont, I told (Piazza) how awesome the hot tub was that we rented. We talked about it for a year and then we went into business."

"We used to have four tanning beds in my salon," Piazza said. "We pulled two of them out to create our (hot tub) showroom."

Although Hot Tubs To Go is the official South Shore distributors of the Softubs, they are not the inventors—Softubs, Inc. is a California-based company which was founded in 1985. They have distributors like Martin and Piazza throughout the country and even in Canada.

"You can put these things anywhere," Piazza said, "inside or outside. You can put them on decks, in living rooms, or on roof decks. They're so lightweight. And they'll last virtually forever."

Martin said he delivers the tubs all the time, and they can fit right in a truck. He added once the tubs are delivered, they are extremely easy to set up and use.

"Once you get used to it, it's nothing," Martin said. "And we also have all the fun toys that go with the tubs—aromatherapy bottles, weights and paddles for physical therapy, even rubber duckies."

He added "The (tubs) are also great because they cost far less to maintain than regular hot tubs, and they are completely portable. You can just roll one right through the doors of your house."

"I've been sleeping like a baby," Piazza said, noting he is also the owner of a Softub. "They just help you sleep better, and they're great for relieving stress. It's a fun product to sell, and we're really enjoying it. I haven't met anyone who didn't want one."

"We don't expect to be millionaires off this or anything," Martin said. "We're doing this because it's fun. When we started, we figured we'd just buy two tubs and rent them out, but it looks like a lot more people are interested than we thought. We're still a young business, so we're just taking it one day at a time."

For more information on Softubs rentals, purchases, or gift certificates call Piazza at (781) 682-4800 or log onto the company website at www.hottubstogo.com. The business is located at Mr. Robert's Hair Salon and Tanning, 564 Broad Street, East Weymouth.

How to Avoid 9 Common Buyer Traps BEFORE Buying a Home

YOUR TOWN - Buying a home is a major investment no matter which way you look at it. But for many homebuyers, it's an even more expensive process than it needs to be because many fall prey to at least a few of many common and costly mistakes which trap them into either paying too much for the home they want, or losing their dream home to another buyer or, worse, buying the wrong home for their needs.

A systemized approach to the homebuying process can help you steer clear of these common traps, allowing you to not only cut costs, but also buy the home that's best for you.

An industry report has just been released entitled "Nine Buyer Traps and How to Avoid Them." This important report discusses the 9 most common and costly of these homebuyer traps, how to identify them, and what you can do to avoid them.

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your FREE copy of this report, call 1-800-581-1081 and enter ID#12129. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Rule 240 may help when flights are delayed

George Hobica

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I read your recent column regarding rules about being bumped from a flight. Does an airline owe compensation if a flight is delayed over seven hours?

In our case, the plane had a mechanical problem, and the airline waited until an available plane arrived. It ruined our weekend vacation to arrive so late at our destination.

A. In general, airlines do not have to pay compensation for late flights. However, they are obligated to refund your money, even on a nonrefundable ticket, if a flight is going to be so late that there's no point in taking your trip. But you have to decide to abort your trip before you've reached your destination (either at the originating airport or a connecting one).

And, many airlines, under their own Rule 240, are required to put you on another airline's flight if it will get you to your destination on time, especially if your original flight is delayed due to mechanical problems or anything else within the airline's control.

In fact, I had an interesting experience recently that illustrates the point. Flying from St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands to San Juan, Puerto Rico, my flight was late due to a late incoming flight, so I missed my connecting flight in San Juan by 10 minutes (the last flight of the day back to New York, my final destination).

American proposed to put me up in a hotel overnight and get me out the next morning, but I had an early morning meeting in New York that I didn't want to miss. So, I politely but firmly explained that there was a flight on Continental leaving in an hour and I'd prefer being put on it.

They told me that only first class was available (I was on a coach ticket), and I explained that under their Rule 240, American was obligated to put me in first class if that's all that was left. They disagreed with me, but put me in first class anyway, "as a courtesy." Had I had a copy of American's contract of carriage I could have forced the issue, but, in the end, I didn't need to.

But, my advice is to know what Rule 240 says for whatever airline you happen to be flying, and try to carry a copy with you. Next time, I'll heed my own advice and bring a copy of the full contract of carriage.

Q. I've heard about support programs for people who are afraid to fly. How can I find out if one is offered in my area?

A. Airlines sometimes run fear of flying programs, but they seem to come and go. Northwest's "Wings" program has been in operation since 1995 and claims a 90 percent success rate. Their seminars are scheduled over the weekend, usually six to eight times a year at Northwest's hub airports in Detroit and Minneapolis.

The cost is $495 per person and includes meals and a round-trip "graduation" flight. Call (612) 726-7733 for more information.

Q. In November 2000, my uncle living in New York died and I flew American Airlines from Phoenix to Long Island and return. My fare was $1,200. I was told that there were no bereavement fare seats left on the outgoing flight, but that my return flight had been discounted. Full fare would have been somewhere around $1,800.

For the same flights, my senior citizen parents got tickets that cost around $300 RT without even needing to mention bereavement fares. This seems outrageous.

Friends are encouraging me to write and complain to American since they feel I was taken advantage of. Would it be worth my while?

A. As I've said in the past, bereavement fares are no bargain. I think the airlines need to revisit the concept of bereavement fares and try to offer a better deal. You probably would have been better off flying on Southwest Airlines, which doesn't have bereavement fares, but offers low last-minute fares to anyone.

For example, Phoenix to Long Island at this writing costs $628 round-trip on Southwest with no advance purchase, whereas the other airlines are charging over $2,000 round-trip. I'm not sure why you didn't use Southwest, but next time give them a try.

As for complaining to American, I think it's a good idea. And, send a copy to your congressman and U.S. senators as well. I think that legislators need to get more involved in airline consumer issues, and writing a letter to your elected officials is a good way to start.

The Top 10 films of 2000

"Billy Elliot"

It was God, I guess, with those commandments — 10 of them — who deserves the blame for the custom of these lists of top 10 whatevers at year's end. Why not 11 commandments? Or nine? Be that as it may, the custom endures. Here's my top 10, in alphabetical order.

"Almost Famous" — A rollicking recollection by Cameron Crowe, of his precocious days as a Rolling Stone correspondent, following a fictional rock group on tour and retaining some of his teenaged virtue while shedding other aspects of it. Whether he really managed to avoid so much as one toke of wacky tobacky is open to question; the movie's charms aren't.

"Billy Elliot" — Another coming-of-age story, this one from Britain, about a lad (newcomer Jamie Bell) who would rather dance than box, his dad and bro who find this weird and poof-y, and the teacher (Julie Walters), who sees his talent and propels his dream.

"Cast Away" — The Tom Hanks tour de force (and certain Oscar nominee) takes a FedEx executive down in a plane crash and plops him on a remote island for many years, to learn lessons of survival and resignation, while retaining hope despite it all. A little "Robinson Crusoe" for our time.

"Chicken Run" — A Claymation whimsy about fowl trying to escape their fate in a dreary English chicken coop cum stalag. Mel Gibson — his voice, that is — is on hand as a rooster with ambitions and blarney to spare.

"Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" — A Mandarin-language film about honor, vengeance, romance, a sword of almost mystical powers, featuring breathtakingly gorgeous martial arts wizardry, magnificent photography, none of which is ruined by the presence of the charmless Chow Yun-Fat as the male lead. Not your father's kung-fooey flick.

"Erin Brockovich" — A crowd pleaser recounting the story of a down-on-her-luck woman (Julia Roberts), fond of skimpy outfits and shooting off her mouth, who finds work with a smalltime lawyer and exposes toxic poisoning in California, helping people and making a financial killing in the process. Earnest and preachy, but effusive and graced as well by Albert Finney as her uncertain boss.

"Love's Labour's Lost" — A Shakespeare romp, set to 1930s music, concocted by Kenneth Branagh and totally tanking at the box office, is pure fun, no heavy lifting, and may live again another day on video, but don't count on it. Audiences didn't care to get the point.

"Nurse Betty" — A combination of violence and comedy, about a dreamy housewife (Renee Zellwegger) with imagination to spare, and criminals (among them Morgan Freeman) with serious plans.

"Traffic" — About the illegal drug world, with nobody emerging as heroic, all as victims. Sober and sensible and at times stunningly sharp, maybe the first really dead-on cinema look at the drug trade in its many ramifications.

"Wonder Boys" — With Michael Douglas as a college professor having a very bad weekend, aided by Frances McDormand as his adulterous squeeze and Robert Downey, Jr., as his libidinous publisher. Enjoy!

Protect plants and gardens from winter chills

The hectic holidays have hastily sped by, heralding in a new year with no end in sight to our present chilly, wintry weather pattern. As I compose this week's article, a major winter storm is predicted, promising to provide our first major snowfall of the season. Despite my aversion to frigid weather, I have come to realize that prolonged periods of freezing temperatures which keep the ground frozen solid continuously are best for our dormant plants and should this frozen ground be covered by an insulating blanket of snow, so much the better.

Green thumbs up

The mild winters we have experienced in recent years have taken their toll on many of our perennials, trees and shrubs. The alternate freezing and thawing of the soil surface has led to many a plant's demise by causing its roots to break at the surface, lifting the crown above ground and exposing it to drying winds and cold. Fall transplants are particularly susceptible to heaving when temperatures fluctuate above and below freezing. While we may prefer the comfort of a moderate winter, our plants may be better off frozen beneath the surface for the duration of the winter months.

The application of a winter mulch is an ideal means of protecting dormant plants from alternate freezing and thawing. Mulches applied over roots after the ground freezes will insulate the surface of the soil. The purpose of this kind of mulch is not to keep the plant warm but rather to keep the ground beneath frozen. The upper two or more inches of the applied mulch alternately freeze and thaw when temperatures rise and fall but the ground remains frozen and slowly thaws when temperatures begin to moderate. It is usually advisable to spread these mulches after the ground has frozen to ensure that most of our destructive little critters have hibernated or they may seek refuge in your cozy covering.

Perhaps the best winter mulch of all is Mother Nature's gift of snow. Unfortunately, the majority of our South Shore winters are open with little or no snow cover. When Mother Nature cannot provide, gardeners can assist in the insulating process by laying down a layer of compost, sawdust, well-decomposed manure, shredded pine bark or chopped leaves, all of which will gradually benefit the soil by adding moisture-retentive organic matter to the soil.

Alternative mulches include salt marsh hay, straw, or pine needles. Never use hay as it is likely to result in innumerable weed seeds which will germination the spring and leads to endless weeding. Salt marsh hay makes an excellent mulch which can usually be purchased at local nurseries, particularly in the fall. Straw may need to be anchored in place, especially in exposed areas, by laying branches over the protected areas to prevent this lightweight material from being strewn about when gusty breezes blow.

White pine needles offer an ideal mulch because they are light and airy yet stay in place as they have a tendency to cling to one another. Several inches of pine needles make a perfect, protective cover which can be easily removed once temperatures moderate in the spring, generally around April 1st. Most bulbs and plants easily poke their foliage up through the lightweight needles should their removable delayed. Evergreen boughs, such as those from your discarded Christmas tree, serve as an excellent mulch and are particularly valuable for covering evergreen perennials, including candytuft (Iberis), evergreen ground phlox (Phlox subulata) and pinks (Dianthus), which may be subject to winterburn due to dry, desiccating winter winds.

For the next three months, most of our woody plants will remain dormant as fluctuating temperatures, chilly winds, snow and ice challenge their very existence. Evergreen plants, especially boxwoods, and broad-leaf shrubs including rhododendrons, mountain laurels, Leucothoe and Oregon hollies, face the greatest hazards. Subjected to desiccating winds and winter sun, their leaves may be scorched, particularly during the latter half of the winter. Most of these woody ornamentals appreciate sheltered or shady locations to minimize this exposure. For shrubs or boxwood hedges which have shown evidence of winterburn in past seasons, the construction of a temporary wind screen may be helpful to minimize damage. Install a series of stakes around these bushes and wrap with burlap leaving the top open for air circulation. Anti-desiccant sprays, available from your local nursery, can be applied to evergreen leaves on warmer days to further protect their leaf surfaces.

Warm days followed by evenings below freezing can also adversely affect our young thin-barked trees, especially those planted in open areas or in south-westerly facing exposures. During the warmth of the day, the trunk of the tree, both its bark and inner core, expand in response to the hear of the sun. When the temperature drops dramatically at night, the thin outer bark rapidly shrinks, while the dense inner core cools down more slowly causing the bark to split and peel. The bark of a tree is analogous to our own skin. If the outer layer is damaged, the vital inner trunk becomes susceptible to damage by insects and diseases. The use of tree wraps, which breathe and expand as temperatures fluctuate during the winter months, can greatly reduce this damage. Be sure to remove this protection each spring.

Cohasset to ink Greenbush deal with MBTA

Public hearing is Jan. 30

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line took another step towards becoming a reality Tuesday night, with the announcement that the Cohasset Board of Selectmen had agreed in theory to a mitigation package with the MBTA.

The agreement, which won't be signed until after a formal public hearing Jan. 30 at the Selectmen's Office, could be worth more than $3.5 million after all mitigation is implemented. Highlights include up to $1.2 million reimbursement for the James Brook flood control project in the village and harbor areas; $1 million in exchange for a "friendly" land taking of the town-owned right-of-way; median strips at all grade crossings; and a bridge from North Main Street, over the tracks, to Rocky Lane.

"We're comfortable with this agreement."
— Selectman Michael Sullivan

Selectmen stopped short of saying they were happy with the agreement.

"We're comfortable with this agreement," said Selectman Michael Sullivan. Both board Chairman Thomas Callahan and Selectman Ronnie McMorris agreed with Sullivan's characterization.

"I think they've given us some good things," McMorris said of the deal. "Comfortable is a good word."

"Relatively speaking, I think we did very well," said Callahan, who reiterated that by entering into an agreement with the MBTA, the town was not endorsing restoration of the 40-year dormant line. "An informal vote we had this fall was three to two against, but there was a need to make the deal."

News of the agreement was welcomed at Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan's office. "It's great news from our perspective, a step in the right direction," said MBTA

Scituate youths nabbed in alleged donut heist

Cohasset police send evidence to Father Bill's

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When most local residents are still sound asleep, a truck from the Donut Shop in Weymouth makes it way south delivering doughnuts in the early hours of the morning to Marylou's News in Cohasset and North Scituate.

But over the past several months, just why those doughnuts sometimes never made it to the shop counters was a total mystery.

"We've been missing doughnuts for a long while," said Marylou Sandry, owner of the Hingham-based Marylou's chain. "Nobody had a clue who did it. We even questioned our supplier who assured us the deliveries were made."

Although there is no evidence linking a Cohasset arrest to other alleged doughnut thefts — Cohasset police apprehended three Scituate youths who were caught with 150 doughnuts and a bag of bagels Sunday morning.

"The youths were following a doughnut delivery truck as it made deliveries in Scituate and Cohasset," Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said. "Apparently they were stealing trays of bagels and donuts after they were dropped off."

It all started at about 3:50 a.m. Sunday when Cohasset police spotted a car with its lights out with three white males inside near Marylou's News on Route 3A. The car was suspect because at that hour the popular coffee shop that is in a fairly remote area is closed. The officer was suspicious because of previous "smash and grab" thefts in the area.

When police Det. Greg Lennon, who was travelling northbound on 3A, turned around to investigate, he observed the Toyota Camry pull out and head southbound at a high rate of speed.

According to the police report, when the officer tried to catch up to the car to get its registration number, the operator of the motor vehicle turned the headlights off and continued to accelerate. Lennon called for back up as the car then made a left onto (lower) King Street and then a right onto North Main Street where it was travelling without headlights in speeds in excess of 85 m.p.h.

"We've been missing doughnuts for a long while. Nobody had a clue who did it. We even questioned our supplier who assured us the deliveries were made."
— Marylou Sandry, owner of the Hingham-based Marylou's chain

Police, who said alcohol was not involved, arrested Jonathan R. Petty, 19, of 22 Collier Ave.; Eric M. Repogle, 17, of 7 Gridley Bryant Road; and a 16-year-old juvenile.

Investigation at the scene revealed several bags of bagels in the passenger compartment and four trays of donuts (about 150 donuts) inside the trunk

All three were charged with larceny of property and receiving stolen property valued at less than $250 and disorderly conduct. Petty was also charged with operating a motor vehicle recklessly as to endanger, speeding, marked

Planning board, sewer seats are up for grabs

Nomination papers at Town Hall

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Planning board member Terry Atherton and Sewer Commissioner Henry Rattenbury both announced last week they will not seek reelection in this spring's town elections.

Both said a reluctance to dedicate numerous hours a month to their positions as a reason for their decision.

Rattenbury, 64, said he has been working with the sewer department in one form or another since 1969, and thought it time for someone else to get involved. "I was on the first sewer study committee in 1969 and I helped out before I ran [for Commissioner]," he said. "I've done three terms and I think that's quite sufficient. I want to give someone else a chance."

Rattenbury also said his new status as a retiree played into his decision. He retired this summer after 37 years as a postal carrier in town and says he hopes to do some traveling. "It's not fair to people trying to get a hold of me," he explained. The sewer commission has been busy during Rattenbury's nine years of service. The town recently wrapped up to separate sewer installation projects in North and Central Cohasset, and is looking at the feasibility of sewering the area around Little Harbor.

For Atherton, it's his "unretired" status that made him turn down a second term on the planning board. He switched jobs last year and said his new one requires more of his time. Atherton said between the workday and the commute, he did-

Hedlund ceremony is close to home

Sworn in for fifth term at local event

After 18 months that included two tough campaigns — one for re-election to the state senate and the other, a failed bid to become the first Weymouth mayor — a battle-weary Bob Hedlund brought what is traditionally a State House ceremony reserved for a few close friends and family members to Hingham last week. A standing room only crowd of upwards of 350 boisterous supporters from his eight-town district packed the Broad Cove Ballroom Thursday to visit with the state senator and see him sworn in for a fifth term.

And if local Republicans had anything to say about it, the event was

Third quarter tax bills are explained

The Town of Cohasset has issued the Fiscal Year 2001 third quarter tax bills due Feb. 1. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the Board of Assessors at 781-383-4114 to confirm the correct mailing address or the Treasurer and or Collector at 781-383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

The Fiscal 2001 total tax is based on the new Fiscal 2001assessment. The new assessments are based on sales market activity during calendar 1999 and early 2000 to reflect the value of real estate as of Jan. 1, 2000. Taxpayers who feel that their property is over assessed and want to contest their assessment must file for an abatement with the Board of Assessors by Feb. 1, 2001.

Property tax exemptions are available to qualifying elderly widows, blind persons and veterans with a 10 percent service connected disability or greater. Please call the Assessors at 383-4114 for more information. Applications for property exemptions must be received by the Board of Assessors no later than March 28, 2001.

The tax bill also contains the new sewer betterment to be paid during this fiscal year is shown of the tax bill under the "special assessment" section and identified as "SEWR". The total amount due is split between the third and fourth quarter payments. Anyone who did not return the appointment request has had the sewer betterment apportioned over twenty years by the Board of Assessors. Anyone who would like to appeal their betterment must file an abatement application with the Sewer Commission within six months of the issuance of the betterment.

Enclosed with the tax bills is an insert that allows taxpayers to make a voluntary contribution to the Scholarship, Education or Elderly and or Disabled funds established last year at the annual town meeting.

Scholarship Fund will provide secondary school tuition assistance to deserving town residents. These funds will be in addition to scholarships currently available to town residents.

Educational Fund will provide supplemental educational funding for the Cohasset Public Schools. Additionally, funds may be used for existing adult literacy programs.

Elderly and or Disabled Fund will provide tax relief for elderly and disabled Cohasset taxpayers who meet specific criteria established by the Elderly and or Disabled Fund committee.

Awards for the above funds will be made once there are sufficient funds available.

MCAS resolution

Selectmen voted unanimously and without any comment Tuesday night, to adopt the Cohasset School Committee resolution criticizing the graduation requirement aspect of the MCAS test.

The resolution asks the Department of Education to "suspend MCAS as a graduation requirement," until the state:

- develops a variety of assessment instruments and criteria "so that no single test will determine the fate of a student"
- changes the length of the test and time it takes away from teaching and learning
- examines the effect the test has on students such as vocational, special education and bilingual students.

The Town of Brookline passed a similar resolution this past fall and is asking all towns to do the same. Cohasset selectmen said the resolution will be passed on to state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and the state Department of Education.

Committee updates

Selectmen named Mark St. Onge to the town's historical commission at the behest of commission chairman Noel Ripley. Also, selectman Ronnie McMorris announced the resignation of Roger Plante from the Council on Elder Affairs.

Committee sends school budgets back to principals

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Sensing taxpayers may be reluctant to open their pocketbooks for a big jump in the school budget — the Cohasset School Committee sent the budget back to the drawing board.

The committee will ask the respective principals to fine tune their budgets, after the bottom line of the FY-02 proposed budget still weighed in at $655,000 more than last year.

"If we were to stop here, the budget would be $10,544,619, a 10 percent increase, and I'm not too comfortable with that," said committee Chairman Pat Martin.

The committee again spent its Jan. 4 meeting trying to slash requests from the budget proposals, but the group soon realized that it was, in member Rick Flynn's words, "nickel and dime-ing" the budget.

Martin agreed saying "We can try to make a lot of little cuts in hopes of taking one big piece out, but that isn't going to happen."

"Cutting $1,000 here and $1,000 there isn't going to work," said committee member Mark DeGiacomo

If the budget was level-funded, the budget would still increase $313,250 because of salary increases for the system's personnel. That would be a 3.27 percent increase in FY-02 over FY-01. However, the committee is looking to add four new teachers at the middle school level to accommodate an influx of students next year. Without the new instructors, middle-high school Principal Dr. Michael Jones said average class size will be in the 30s.

Osgood School Principal Marilee Cantelmo is also requesting a new third-grade teacher and technology instructor, as well as more time for art and music. Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan is seeking the smallest budget increase, though he also is looking for more music time, as well as $23,000 for books and supplies.

"We can try to make a lot of little cuts in hopes of taking one big piece out, but that isn't going to happen."

— Pat Martin, school committee chairman

Martin pointed out that the budget will be at least as big as it was last year, and that any discussions of "cuts" involve additional requests made by the principals.

DeGiacomo said the additional budget requests should probably be cut by about $270,000.

Three years of stagnant budgetary inflation has placed a strain on the system, said Martin. She said 103 new students have entered the system, but funding has not increased during that time frame. As a result, the district's budget has been "stretched." This year's budget was up $84,000 over the FY-00 (apart from contractual salary increases). In 1999, the school committee was forced to cut the school budget, school officials said.

Members question if another large budget prompts the need for an override — especially after last year's vote for the $41.5 million school improvement project — whether that override would pass

In May of 1999, the town approved a $380,000 Proposition 2 fi override, the lowest option available on the ballot, in a sign that town residents were nervous of spiraling property taxes.

"We've been down this road two years ago where the budget was high and we got stopped," Martin said. "We're still hurting, we're still behind the eight-ball."

Committee member Chartis Tebbetts and some parents at the meeting pushed for a large budget increase, saying a significant increase is long overdue, and it is necessary to maintain a quality school system.

"This is stuff needed to keep a good learning environment," Tebbetts said. "We need to do that."

Osgood School Council member Adrienne McCarthy agreed. She reasoned that after three years of no school budget increases, a one-year 10 percent increase would average out to a 3 percent increase over those three barren years. "It's the town responsibility to teach the kids," McCarthy said. "We're not asking for frills."

However, Flynn said the committee had to be realistic..

"We all share that thought [of wanting a 10 percent increase], but the political reality is that we tried that once and got our clock-cleaned," he said referring to the 1999 override scenario.

Flynn pushed the need to prioritize the budget requests, picking out the proposal to reinstate a "no-cut" policy in middle school sports as an example of something to be put on hold. He said in order to bring on board four new teachers at the middle school, the committee needs to cut "a big figure so we get some kind of wash." Knowingly playing the role of "heretic" he suggested against the no-cut policy. "The question we need to ask is what can we not live without? And middle school sports falls to the bottom of the list," he said.

Martin and the committee sent the budgets back to the principals for prioritization, putting the onus on them to reduce their budget requests. In the meantime, the committee said it will work with the various PSO's to "educate" town residents about the need for the increase.

MS walk volunteers

Volunteers are needed Saturday, Jan. 13 to help promote the Cohasset MS Walk 2001.

Each volunteer will spend a few hours distributing Walk registration brochures in convenient locations around Cohasset to recruit walkers. A brief organizational meeting will be held the morning of Jan. 13 at Cohasset Lightkeepers Inn, Border Street. The annual fund raising event has been conducted by the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, Central New England Chapter for 11 years. To volunteer or for more information, contact Brenda Barbour at 1-800-493-9255.

More than 6,000 people participated in walk last year, raising a record $1.3 million. More than 85 percent of those funds were used for MS research making progress towards a cure, and for local programs to improve quality of like for 11,000 people with MS, and their families, in Mass. and N.H. The goal this year is to recruit 11,000 walkers, one for each person with MS, and to raise $1.5 million. The MS Walk 2001 takes place in 22 locations, March 31, April 1 and 7, and May 5 and 12. To walk for a cure, call 1-800-fight MS.

Lifting of landfill moratorium trashed

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

No one likes a dump in their backyard and if John K. McNabb Jr. has his way — then no one will have to worry about any new landfills being permitted anywhere in the state.

McNabb, a water commissioner who also serves as solid waste policy director for Clean Water Action, an environmental activist organization, and as a member of the Cohasset anti-landfill expansion group SAFE, warns that more landfills could be on the horizon.

Last month the state Department of Environmental Protection released its report lifting the moratorium on new landfills and landfill expansions imposed in 1995.

As a result, McNabb warns that Cohasset Heights Landfill on Rte. 3A may now try to expand.

CHL owner Paul Barry said he has not ruled out trying to open what is known as Area 5. But Barry said he has been so busy fighting opposition to his plan to construct a transfer station in Abington that he hasn't had time to focus on it.

However to set the stage for a possible expansion of CHL, Barry filed a form A or subdivision plan before the new zoning by-law passed Town Meeting last spring. The attorney general approved the article enacted at the 2000 annual Town Meeting changing the zoning on a section of Rte. 3A from light industrial to technology business. The new zoning bylaw could prevent CHL from re-opening or expanding the existing landfill at the current location because landfills would not be permitted in the new technology zone. However, Barry believes the Form A protects his rights.

Barry, who closed CHL in July 1997 because there was no more room there for additional waste material, has pursued a plan to expand into an unused area of the facility, the 27.5-acre Area 5-B. To expand, he would need a site assignment which is the chief local approval issued by the town in approving a landfill. Barry has been unable to apply for the new site assignment because of the state moratorium.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, has co-sponsored legislation filed by Rep. Tom O'Brien, D-Kingston, and Rep. Mark Carron, D-Southbridge, to reinstate the moratorium.

"I understand that Mr. Barry is a businessman but we have to weigh the cost benefits," Bradley said. "We have to weigh the potential problems with the water supply and the effect on the environment. The town has spent significant money fighting this."

Bradley said the answer to the state's landfill crunch could be to focus more aggressively on recycling.

McNabb said Clean Water Action, along with the Massachusetts Coalition to Reduce Waste, released the Citizen's Solid Waste Master Plan last spring, which calculated the state could solve the solid waste problem more effectively by focusing on waste reduction and increased recycling, and not increased disposal.

McNabb said lifting the moratorium would "open the floodgates for the for-profit trash industry to file dozens of site assignment applications for landfills across the state."

$300K override looming

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A 23 percent increase in the town health insurance plan is being fingered as the culprit behind a possible $300,000 Proposition 2 1/2 override this spring.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said though he and town Finance Director Michael Buckley have cut out as much fat from the anticipated FY-2002 $25.8 million town operating budget as possible, and kept other department budgets mostly level-funded, the deficit still exists. The only way to make up the $300,000, without lay-offs would be an override that would raise the average tax bill by $466.

"There is not a lot of fat in this budget," Haddad told selectmen and representatives from the town's Advisory Committee Tuesday night. He said despite consolidation of certain Town Hall positions, and more than $1 million increase in receipts from tax revenues, new growth and town fees, "the one thing we couldn't overcome is the increase in benefits."

Up until November, Haddad said it appeared he would be able to pass a budget without the need of an override, however, the town then received word that Blue Cross and Blue Shield, the town's insurance agent, would be raising costs 23 percent – or a $250,000 increase overall. Also, the Norfolk Country Retirement Board told Haddad it will need an additional $50,000.

Haddad said the department budgets have essentially been level-funded for the past four years, and has eliminated four positions in that time. "There is no more fat in Town Hall," he explained.

The main budgetary increases would be for a $600,000 jump in the school budget and $38,000 to cover salary increases under new collective bargaining agreements with the town police and clerical unions.

The school committee has not yet approved a budget for FY-2002, but has been eyeing a number similar to the one Haddad is recommending (see related story).

The board was critical of the large insurance rate increase.

"I just don't get that size of an increase," Selectman Michael Sullivan said. "How can they justify a 23 percent hit?"

Buckley said a change in the federal funding of Medicaid and Medicare has caused hospitals and doctors to pass on costs to private insurance holders, and that every town in the 80-town Massachusetts Municipal Association — of which Cohasset is a member — is facing the same increase.

The proposed budget would be a 9.79 percent increase over the $23.5 million FY-2001 town operating budget.

The $2.3 million increase would be made up in part by a $400,000 increase in the town levy limit, $400,000 in new growth, $280,000 in overlay surplus, and an increase in town receipts and free cash.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

WINTER IS HERE

Hello Cohasset! Is everyone enjoying this beautiful winter weather that we are having? I am sure that the answer is no for a lot of you as the commute is no fun in it I am sure. For the rest of us however, it really is pretty and a lot of fun. Enjoy it, as Spring is right around the corner.

COOKIE TIME

It is yummy Girl Scout Cookie time! Make sure to find a Girl Scout in your neighborhood to purchase some wonderful cookies. The cookies can be frozen if they make it that long and only cost $3 a box. Mmmm, mmmm, mmmm.

WILL BE MISSED

I would like to take this time to extend condolences to the family and friends of Dennis Kuntz. Mr. Kuntz was well-known in town and was a gym teacher for many years in our school system. His love for children and physical education was a great combination for him to share with everyone fortunate enough to have had him in their lives. He will be missed!

ART CLASSES

The South Shore Art Center here in town is offering new art courses for the year, 2001. This year, resolve to color your life and do something for yourself. Take an art class and exercise your creativity... Adult Courses include: Monoprinting, Botanical Illustration, Painting for the Petrified, Life Drawing, Beginners Drawing, Chinese BrushPainting, Calligraphy, Basic Darkroom, Oil Painting, Clay, Pastels, Watercolor, Collage and Drawing Studio. All Adult courses begin the week of Jan. 16. For children and teens, quite an array of classes is offered as well. Young Illustrators, Hands in Clay, Paper Treasures, Creative Clay, Fun with Folklore, Draw, Paint, Explore, Time Travelers, Animals in Art, Myths, Oil Painting, Teen Drawing, Draw What you See, Cocoa Time Parent and Child Workshop. All children's classes begin the week of Jan. 22. To register for any classes or for more information call, 383-2787 or visit www.ssec.org

Malmesbury Abbey House with its boxwood topiary and hedges is part of the "Art of the English Garden Tour."

TOYS FOR TOTS

Greg Small, left, and Herbie Jason pose with three truckloads for Toys for Tots. The annual toy drive was sponsored by Cohasset police and South Shore Truckers Auto Club.

GARDEN TOUR

Some more news from the Art Center was passed on to me as well. The Art of the English Garden Tour once again presented by the South Shore Art Center is approaching. In May, when English Gardens are bursting into bloom, Sarah Roche, a South Shore Art Center teacher and transplanted Briton, will lead the SSAC's third annual Art of the English Garden Tour. Gardens included in this 10-day adventure range from large ornate parks to small, intimate retreats. Among the gardens included are Sudeley Castle, Sezincote, the Queen's Gardens at Windsor, and Stourhead, as well as many private gardens. The trip will culminate with a visit to the Chelsea Flower Shows. Guests will stay at three beautiful hotels, all period properties.

The first is a country house in the Costwold Village of Broadway, close to the history of Shakespeare's Stratford on Avon. The second is a prize winning Regency hotel in the center of Bath and the last stop will be at a recently refurbished London Townhouse, located on a quiet side street and close to the Chelsea Flower Show. This tour sold out quickly the last two years that it was offered. The package price of $3,000 includes airfare, all transport costs, cancellation insurance, bed and breakfasts,(and some dinners are included), all garden entrances, including the Chelsea Flower Show and the leadership of Sarah Roche. For more information, call Sarah at 383-0736 or Betsy Walsh at Lido Travel, 383-1980 or, log on at www.ssac.org

NDA SCHOLARSHIP

Notre Dame Academy awards four scholarships each year, right after the Christmas Liturgy is celebrated. The Colleen Clancy Memorial Scholarship was established in 1998 in her memory. Colleen's parents chose to award the scholarship's in December because Colleen loved Christmas. The scholarships are open to all grades and recipients are chosen for their participation in some of the many activities Colleen enjoyed during her years at NDA. One of the scholarships this year was awarded to Rachel McElroy, '03 of Cohasset. Great job, Rachel.

XAVERIAN HONORS

Xaverian Brothers High School announced its honor roll students for the first marking period of the 2000-2001 academic school year. Michael James Dwyer, class of 2003, son of Mr and Mrs. John Dwyer made this honor. Congratulations Michael.

SSCC nursery school registration to start

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School announces nursery school applications for the 2001-2002 school year will become available on Tuesday, Jan. 16 at the Nursery School and Community Center offices. Call 383-0036 for more information.

Nursery School registration is based on a lottery system. Applications will be available Jan 16 to 24.

Completed applications must be returned to the South Shore Community Center Office by Thursday, Jan. 25. Application envelopes should be marked Nursery School Registration Application.

Parents registering their child in the three-year old program should enclose a copy of the child's birth certificate to ensure proper placement of students in the program. All applications must include the $90 registration fee. Family membership for the school year is included in the fee. There is no financial commitment for children who are placed on the waiting list; checks will be returned.

The lottery will be drawn the week of Jan. 29. Nursery School acceptance letters will be sent via the mail Friday, Feb. 9.

The school offers three levels of programs to meet the needs of three to five-year olds. Programs run from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and 12:30 to 3 p.m. Some extended before and after school programs will be available.

The Nursery program is for children who will be three years of age by Oct. 20, 2001. The Pre-kindergarten program is for children who are, or will be, four-years old by Oct. 20, 2001. The four day and five day Enrichment programs are offered to older four-year olds and five-year olds who have attended a Pre-kindergarten program but are ineligible for kindergarten, or would benefit from an Enrichment year.

Please direct questions regarding placement to the Director, Lynne Sheridan. Parent observation is welcome.

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School is licensed by the Massachusetts Office of Child Care Services.

Planning board, sewer seats are up for grabs

n't have the necessary time to dedicate himself to another five years. However, he said he'll miss being an elected official. "It was a good way of staying in touch with what's going on in the town and having a say in it," he said.

Board of Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan and three-term Selectman Merle Brown expect to run again for the town's executive board. Callahan was the first person to take out papers for the upcoming election for any position. He said he is looking forward to the next three years, specifically town and region-wide planning efforts and making sure the town is protected when Greenbush commuter rail line service is restored.

With both Callahan and Brown running, the chance of former state representative Mary Jeanette Murray seeking a seat on the board seems less likely. Murray, who retired this year after 24 years in the State House, and is a former three-term board of selectmen member, has said she is considering running again. However, she said in an interview with the Mariner last week that if there wasn't an open seat, she probably wouldn't run.

Stephen Bobo, chairman of the board of health, also announced he would seek a second term. Bobo said he expects to be kept busy approving sewer hookup plans in town, and working with the Department of Environmental Protection creating a storm water management plan. "One of the new issues we are facing is body art parlors," Bobo said. This past fall, the state supreme court ruled the state ban on body artists was a violation of free speech rights. The state Department of Health is currently putting together a set of regulations for towns and cities to base their own regulations upon.

Both school committee Chairman Pat Martin and member Mark DeGiacomo will seek second terms.

"I feel we're in the middle of several initiatives I want to work to see completed such as the middle/high school accreditation and budget process," Martin explained. "The second reason is after witnessing former school committee members not run, I realize the importance of having experience and consistency."

Last year, both committee members up for reelection did not run. In fact, no incumbent school committee member has sought reelection since at least 1997.

DeGiacomo followed in Martin's steps by announcing, but not before stringing people along a bit at last Thursday's committee meeting. He began his comments by saying the committee was an "awful large time commitment" and that he had "enjoyed almost every minute" of his time. But, much to the relief of fellow committee member Stephanie Noble, who let out an audible cheer, he added, "The school committee has made some terrific stride and I'm pleased to be part of that."

Two water commissioners spots will be up for election, though one will be for a one-year term to replace former commissioner Chip Muncey. Muncey resigned Jan.1, and was temporarily replaced by Glenn Pratt, until someone can be elected to fill the year left of his term. Pratt is expected to run. Robert Kasameyer's seat is also up for election. Kasameyer couldn't be reached for comment.

Nomination papers for the annual town election are now available at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions are up for grabs:

Selectmen - two for three years

School Committee - two for three years

Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three for three years

Assessor - one for three years

Board of Health - one for three years

Cohasset Housing Authority - one for five years

Planning Board - one for five years

Recreation Commission - one for five years

Sewer Commission - one for three years

Water Commission - one for three years, one for one year to fill an unexpired term

Nomination papers must be submitted to the Board of Registrars by Feb. 15. Town elections will be held on Saturday, April 7.

the unofficial start of Campaign 2002 for Hedlund, one of the few Massachusetts Republican success stories last November.

Weymouth Boy Scout Troop 2 Drum Corps played a stirring cadence as Hedlund entered the hall flanked by fellow Republicans Senate minority leader Brian Lees, R-East Longmeadow, and Plymouth County District Attorney Michael Sullivan, who administered the oath to cheers of "We're with Bob" and "Hedlund for Governor!"

"Because of your help and support, I wanted everyone to be here for my swearing in," Hedlund told the raucous group. "It is your swearing in as much as it is mine."

Hedlund thanked his supporters, whom he described as "adopted aunts, uncles, mothers and fathers."

"I couldn't do it alone. I appreciate the time, attention and effort each and everyone of you made on my behalf." Hedlund added while he loves the job, it's the campaigning he could do without.

"In 1998 when I was unopposed, it was one of the greatest years of my life," he said to laughter.

But local party activists aren't going to let the senator rest. They say they aren't about to let the Plymouth-Norfolk senate seat that includes the coastal towns from Weymouth to Duxbury slip to the other side of the party aisle.

"Without the presidential race, Hingham would have been 70 percent for Hedlund," said a determined Carl Harris, who is head of the Hingham Republican Town Committee. A majority of Hingham voters backed Democrat Al Gore while Hedlund won the town with a 3,400-vote margin over Democratic challenger Jim Cantwell of Weymouth. Many say the Hingham margin gave Hedlund the needed boost to beat Cantwell, a former Marshfield selectman, who reportedly is keeping his campaign office open with an eye to another run in 2002.

"Next time we have a shot at winning Hingham by 70 percent, that's the challenge, that's our goal. It's going to require a lot of work and we're starting now," Harris said.

But it wasn't only Republicans who flocked to Hedlund's special swearing in last week in Hingham. Weymouth Town Councilor Bill Barry, a lifelong Democrat, was on hand with a contingent of Hedlund supporters from his town.

"Everybody likes Bob," Barry said. "He provides constituent service par excellence."

But Hedlund, who supported Joe Malone's bid to unseat Gov. Cellucci back in 1996, hasn't always been popular with the hierarchy of his own party at Beacon Hill. Malone, a Republican, is a former state treasurer.

Lees, the Republican minority leader, described Hedlund as "a very independent person, an independent voter."

"Bob is known as a senator that puts his district first," Lees said. "(To Bob) it doesn't matter what I say, what Governor Cellucci says or what Lt. Gov. Swift says. It's what you say that is important."

"I ran with Bob for the State House in 1990," he recalled. "I remember Bob as young, brash and outspoken — someone who could tell it like it is as a freshman senator.

"Boy, have things changed. Have you noticed Bob is not as young as he used to be?" Lees said to cheers and applause.

Janet Fogarty, chairman of the Cohasset Republican Town Committee, said Hedlund wins despite his party affiliation.

"People support Bob because he fights for his district," said Fogarty adding that Hedlund has bipartisan support. "But as far as the Republican Party in the state goes, it is at a crisis level. We really have to start on the local level and get people involved.

"It's politically correct to be a Democrat when so many have Republican principles," Fogarty said.

Village Public Workshop #3

Tuesday, January 23rd @ 7:30 pm
Lightkeepers' Residence

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the third in a series of four community workshops to improve the infrastructure in Cohasset Village

The goal of this workshop is to establish a consensus on definitive aesthetic, circulation, and safety options to improve the village infrastructure.

The design ideas presented at this workshop will be a culmination of the public input received, survey information recently completed, and the work of the designers and engineers at The Cecil Group.

- How should new sidewalks be constructed?.....

  .....Brick? Concrete? Asphalt? Granite?

- Should the village have pedestrian scale lighting?.....

  .....What Style? 1900? 1930? 2000?

- Should Elm Street (from S. Main to Brook St.) and Brook Street have a one-way traffic pattern?

The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will bring definitive proposals on these ideas, and many additional items, to help the community make the necessary choices, and further shape a vision for Cohasset Village.

Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm Street (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10:00 am – 4:00 pm; Tuesday 12:00 – 8:00 pm. We encourage you to review the plans on display, and help preserve the community vision of Cohasset Village.

Invasion of the child's world

Whatever happened to the child's world, that world where youngsters played with each other by themselves? Little Charlie Browns far from the eyes and ears of adults.

They played pickup baseball with a black-taped ball on a dusty sandlot with rocks for bases.

They played slapshot hockey on a frozen pond with a milk carton for a goal.

They played blacktop basketball, young arms hurling airballs into frayed hoops.

There was the yelling. The fighting. The "I'll take my bat and go home."

Then there was the making up. The concessions. The return of the bat.

There were no scores kept. All that mattered was the next shot.

When did adults decide they had to invade that world?

It probably began innocently enough. A dad watching a rag-tag little team trading cries of "He's out" and "He's safe" and deciding to umpire the game.

Then came along another dad. Another rag-tag team. Another umpire.

Before you knew it, there were more dads, more teams. Leagues were formed.

Our children can't learn by themselves, the dads said.

So coaches were added.

Our children can't play in sweaty T-shirts and ripped jeans, they said.

So uniforms were added.

Our children can't get dust on these beautiful uniforms, they said.

So pristine fields and smooth-as-glass ice rinks were built.

Our children can't play without knowing the score, they said.

So big scoreboards were erected.

Our children can't play without knowing who the best teams and the best players are, they said.

So playoffs, All Stars, MVPs, and trophies were added.

We can't have trophy-winning teams in beautiful uniforms, on perfect fields with big scoreboards without fans, they said.

So stands filled with parents were added, parents who paid for the uniforms, the gear, the fields, the ice, the scoreboards, and the trophies.

Some came to the games for the sheer joy of watching their child play. Some came with dreams of athletic scholarships. Some came with a scary zeal.

A strange flip flop occurred.

The children were not allowed to work out their differences as they did on the sandlots, the frozen ponds, and the blacktop of yesteryear. Adults ruled their games.

Adults robbed them of their childish ways of settling differences, then took on the squabbles themselves, yelling, fighting, name calling.

This phenomenon soon got out of hand.

It reached horrifying proportions in Reading six months ago when an off-ice altercation at a hockey rink led to the beating death of a father of four following a youth scrimmage.

This event was a shocking wake up call.

Parents re-evaluated their fervor and their behavior.

But time anesthetized the sting.

Last week, police say a Holbrook father assaulted his son's coach, who is from Braintree, at a rink in Hingham after a high school hockey game.

Police say the father, angered that the coach asked his 14-year-old son to get water for the team, grabbed him by the jacket and pushed him through a locker room door.

Here is an eyewitness account.

The Holbrook-Avon Panthers game has just ended.

The Panthers won 4-2, scoring two goals in the last period.

The team was ecstatic as they skated to one of two side-by-side locker rooms to wait for their coach, who was outside the locker room with a player.

Before the coach could join the team, the father of the player approached him. There was a tense discussion.

"Go to the locker room," the coach told the boy.

"No, he's not," the father screamed.

"Then he's off the team," the coach said.

At that point the father allegedly charged the coach and pushed him into the empty locker room.

The coach tried to defend himself.

Within seconds, the policeman on duty was on the scene, broke up the fight, and handcuffed the father.

It all only took a few seconds.

The coach of the opposing team arrived at the scene. "They won the game. What the heck is going on?" he said in amazement.

Good question.

What the heck is going on?

Now the father, who has two sons on the team, faces charges and must stay away from the coach and the arena. He will not be able to watch his boys play for the rest of the year.

The coach and anyone else who witnessed the scene were shaken up.

We were lucky that no one got seriously hurt, or even killed as in Reading.

Youth sports are for our youth, not for parents. They are supposed to be for fun.

If parents can't police themselves at games, maybe we should give sports back to our children and let them work out their own differences on the sandlots, the frozen ponds, and the blacktop of yesteryear.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Supports CRC

TO THE EDITOR:

In response to the many letters I have been reading in the Mariner criticizing the Cohasset Revitalizaton Committee, I am circulating a petition to support the Cohasset Revitalization Committee (CRC). Based on conversations I have had around town, many more people support the CRC's efforts than one might glean from reading the letters of a vocal minority. My petition commends the CRC for its initiative, it recognizes that their recommendations are subject to the approval of the town, and encourages the Town of Cohasset to support and regulate the CRC.

Townspeople who are interested in signing the petition, obtaining one for circulation, or placing one in your place of business, please call me at 383-6110.

COHASSET CARES

Ecopsychology

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The whole point of this week's column is to communicate one idea: there is a possibility that our emotional wellbeing depends upon our relatedness to the earth. This idea I credit to Theodore Roszak, psychologist, writer, and professor at California State University, the author of "The Voice of the Earth." Ecopsychology is one of the chapters in our Deep Ecology course initiated by Jim Shipsky and using materials from the Northwest Earth Institute out of Portland, Oregon.

The Deep Ecology course has been intensely stimulating, covering such topics as spirituality and the earth, Native American Wisdom, simplicity, ritual, celebration. One chapter on the Gaia Hypothesis taught me about the possibility of the earth's being an integral, vital "unit," aware, perceptive in a magnificent way, able to respond in its (Her?) own way to man's disregard or selfishness.

Another chapter on bioregionalism taught me to continue being as observant as possible about Cohasset—the soil under our feet here, all the ledge, our cattails, our crows our arching geese, our Irish moss, our Big Dipper pointing to the North Star. It's easy to get disjointed, especially in the winter, and to think we're indoor machines, when we know very well that the outside air relieves the nasal congestion caused by heated buildings…

Back to ecopsychology. The idea that our basis in nature, instinctive at birth and readily observable in children by their love of animals, becomes lost in our modern lifestyles yet remains more of a healing balm than we realize, outside the window, is fascinating. Have most of your epiphanies been inside or outdoors? See you next time.

Forum on election reform

"What Can Be Done? A Forum on Election Reform and Beyond" will be presented Wednesday, Jan. 17, at 7:30 p.m. at the Duxbury Library by Mass. Bay South, a South Shore chapter of the Alliance for Democracy.

The forum will consider election reform, campaign finance, balloting procedures, also, instant runoff voting, proportional representation, true democratic representation and how to change the system. Featured speakers will include:

Ronnie Dugger, author, expert on voting systems, journalist who covered the Florida recounts battle and founder - Alliance for Democracy, committed to changing the corporate dominated system.

Attorney Bonnie Tenneriello of the National Voting Rights Institute. NVRI has been reframing campaign finance reform as the next phase of the civil rights movement.

Brian Moriarty of Duxbury will give an update on the Mass. Clean Elections bill, where it stalled but a similar bill succeeded in Maine.

The public is invited to come listen, learn and add your voice to the debate! Help Mass. Bay South figure out what comes next.

For more information, call Jean Maryborn of Norwell, 826-2482, Brian Moriarty of Duxbury, 934-7100 or Sarah Killory-Rodrigues of Kingston at 582-1573.

LIBRARY CORNER

Winter story hour

Registration for the six-week 2001 winter story hour at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is still open.

Come into the library and sign up for the story hours being held Thursday at 1 p.m. and Fridays at 10 a.m.

beginning Thursday, Jan. 11 and continuing until Friday, Feb. 16.

Children must be at least three and one half to five years old to participate. The 45-minute program include picture stories, songs and crafts. Call Suzanne Terry, Children's Librarian at 383-1348.

Sad farewell

Jean Higgins, a volunteer at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for more than 10 years, passed away on Christmas Eve after a very long battle with cancer. Her children were by her side at the time of her death and a funeral Mass attended by many townspeople celebrated her life of giving and volunteering.

Jean was always there for anyone who needed help and gave back to the community through many hours at the library, driving for Meals on Wheels, and at town hall issuing beach tickets each season. Cohasset has once again lost a lifelong citizen whose dedication to community service is exemplary. She will be missed by the whole town.

Train study group back on track

State presses for quick review of report

By Rick Collins and Carol Meyer
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After a three-year hiatus, the Greenbush Citizens Advisory Committee is back on track.

The committee, charged with reviewing the final Environmental Impact Report — an environmental feasibility study — for the proposed restoration of the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Line, had been relegated to the sidelines. The MBTA was ensconced in Section 106 hearings with the Army Corps of Engineers.

The hearings were held by the Corps as part of the National Historic Preservation Act, to examine what impact the train would have on historical properties along the 17-mile long Greenbush right-of-way.

"The historical review process has dragged on for three years, much longer than was originally expected," said CAC vice-president and Hingham resident Alexander Macmillan.

With the hearings wrapped up, and a draft version of the EIR partially released, the idling CAC has been asked to shift into high gear.

"The T has asked us to review it fast," said Cohasset resident Martha Gjesteby. "The T would like us to take only three meetings to review it, but we feel we need more."

The next CAC meeting, scheduled for 7 p.m., Jan. 17 at Gates Intermediate School Library in Scituate. Public comment time will be available.

The CAC is designed by the state to be the citizen review vehicle for the controversial project. CAC members from each Greenbush corridor town, appointed by the secretary of environmental affairs, are charged under state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA) regulations to deal with the environmental review of "major and complicated projects, of which Greenbush is one," said Macmillan.

And now with the EIR in hand, or at least most of it (the state is still working on some sections and has not released them) it's the CAC's opportunity to add its two cents to the project. Gjesteby, a member of the group since it was founded in 1984, said the CAC literally has to go through the massive document page by page, making whatever comments it feels is necessary. "The T gives us chapters and we comment on them, say what we like or don't," she said. "The final arbiter is the secretary of the EOEA, who takes our comments as they would any citizen's comments."

The group met for the first time in nearly three years last month, and is already stirring the pot. According to both Gjesteby and Macmillan, the CAC sent a letter to Secretary of Transportation Kevin Sullivan and Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand asking for more time to review the final Greenbush environmental impact report and associated documents.

"We just don't have all the stuff," Gjesteby said, adding that with nine new members, and six years since the last draft came out in 1994, a final review can't be finished in three meetings.

"Everyone wants to complete the environmental review as expeditiously as possible," the letter said, "but in view of the significance, complexity and controversial nature of the Greenbush project, we hope you will agree that it is essential to avoid giving the impression that important issues are being glossed over in a 'rush of judgment.'"

Plus, the Corps has not released its final report from the Section 106 hearings, outlining specific required historical mitigation measures the MBTA will have to take.

The group is also concerned that not all towns have mitigation agreements in place with MBTA, more than a decade after the project began to roll forward. Hingham has reached an agreement with the MBTA, calling for an 800-foot tunnel through Hingham Square – something the CAC recommended back in the early 1990's. A deal with Cohasset was just agreed to this week. Agreements have not been reached in Braintree, Weymouth and Scituate.

"That is not our role [negotiation mitigation agreements]," said Gjesteby, a former member of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council. "But it is helpful if all the communities have mitigated, then we don't have that kind of pressure on us."

"Towns without agreements are going into the process without protection," Macmillan added.

The CAC review of the EIR may be one of the last chances citizens have to formally comment on the project.

"Under the Massachusetts Environmental Protection Act, Secretary Durand is supposed to extract a commitment from the project builder — in this case the MBTA — that (Greenbush restoration) will be done in accord with the plans submitted and mitigation also gets spelled out," Macmillan said. "It's like issuing a building permit. The MBTA can't go ahead and stick a shovel in the ground until that's done."

Once the EIR is approved by Durand, it would be very difficult to get anything changed.

Gjesteby, who is pro-train, warned about going into these meetings with a closed mind. "You don't just blindly say you want the train, or blindly say you don't want the train, you have to blend it all together.

The Greenbush CAC was originally part of the CAC that oversaw the construction of the Middleboro and Plymouth branches of the Old Colony line. But when it became apparent Greenbush would be a tougher sell than the other two lines, it was separated out into its own project. Since that time, the Middleboro and Plymouth lines have been constructed.

spokesperson John Carlisle. "I think the deal is fair and equitable for both sides."

The agreement is the culmination of more than five years of negotiations by the town Mitigation Committee and the MBTA. The dealings were often far from productive, and became acrimonious this past June when the MBTA suddenly announced it was backing off from the negotiating table. However, the selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad —who along with mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber, has done the lion's share of the negotiating — credit a September meeting with Governor Paul Cellucci as being a catalyst in the stalled negotiations.

"We saw a real move after the meeting with the Governor," Haddad said. At the meeting, Cellucci ordered Kevin Sullivan to etch out deals with the Greenbush corridor towns within 60 to 90 days. Though the Cohasset agreement comes more than 100 days after the meeting, no one is complaining.

"Negotiations took on a different air after that meeting," Michael Sullivan said, who attended the State House meeting. He added that after a "frustrating" spring and summer, the MBTA exhibited "good-faith negotiating" after the meeting. "To have something done [essentially three months after the meeting] is pretty good," he said. "The acceleration and commitment to negotiate, that the MBTA made, was good to see based upon past experiences. It was somewhat surprising."

A deal had been struck essentially in early December, but selectmen had some hang-ups over language in the agreement, and the unsettled right-of-way issue. Those issues were resolved largely at a meeting Monday afternoon in Boston.

A copy of the deal is available at both Town Hall and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Though residents are able to comment and critique the agreement, Callahan was doubtful how much, if anything, could be changed. "The MBTA has made it clear there isn't much room for future discussion," he said. "But if there are major issues, it could possibly be revisited."

One of the major sticking points from December, when selectmen first said a deal was imminent, was the MBTA acquisition of the town-owned rail bed. Haddad said the MBTA believed quite strongly that it would be able to take it at no cost through eminent domain. However, the town had the property appraised this fall at near $2 million. The agreement struck with the MBTA calls for a "friendly" land-taking, where Cohasset agrees to give up the land in exchange for a $1million settlement.

Callahan called this a "good achievement," along with the $1.2 million reimbursement for any work done in relation to the James Brook flood control project. The town also will get up to $120,000 for any expenses incurred by the town for that project. (see sidebar for detailed list of mitigation items)

All noise and vibration mitigation for homeowners and business owners will be dealt with on an individual basis. The agreement does call for a liaison between the MBTA, town and residents, to deal with noise and vibration issues.

In addition, the MBTA told the town it would support an application for up to $1 million in a Public Works Economic Development (PWED) grant. The grant money would be used to make aesthetic improvements to the area surrounding the grade crossings in town.

Callahan also warned not to compare Cohasset's agreement to the one struck in Hingham last May. Hingham signed a deal that adds up to more than $41 million, though most of that money will be for the construction of an 800-foot tunnel through Hingham Square. "I don't want people to re-tout [the Hingham deal]," Callahan said. "We learned a lot from the Hingham deal and improved on the non-tunnel aspects."

Selectmen Fred Koed said the deal "solidified what should be done to protect the interests of the town," and that all residents, whether they are pro or anti-train, should be in favor of the agreement.

Callahan also added that the agreement does not discuss air pollution associated with the train's diesel engines, because that issue is outside the town's jurisdiction.

Callahan extended his "highest kudos" to Gruber, and the mitigation committee for their hard work in hammering out an agreement. "The amount of time they put in over the years is staggering," he said.

The MBTA will pay the town $1 million for a "friendly" land taking of the Greenbush right-of-way shown here at Sohier Street.

Highlights of mitigation measures

The following are highlights of the "Agreement Letter of Understanding" the Cohasset Board of Selectmen announced it was entering into with the MBTA Tuesday night. The full text of the agreement can be viewed at Town Hall of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. A public hearing will be held Jan. 30, at 7:30 p.m. in the selectmen's office.

The agreement calls for:

- The MBTA to reconstruct the existing town parking lot, and construct a parking lot south of the railroad between Smith Place and Pleasant Street
- The MBTA to install permanent walkways on either side of the railroad between Pleasant Street and a point opposite 105 Ripley Road
- The MBTA to provide, cause to be installed and maintain vibration and noise mitigation within the right-of-way, provide and maintain vibration mitigation between Smith Place and Pleasant Street, and provide proper vibration mitigation for ABB Optical
- no horns to be sounded, except in case of emergency or temporary situations
- no quad-gates for the time being
- median barriers at grade crossings between 60 and 100 feet long. The grade crossing at North Main Street may be longer
- a new traffic signal at the King Street, Forest Avenue and North Main Street intersection
- a bridge over the railroad between North Main Street and Rocky Lane subdivision
- a new sidewalk on the east side of Sohier Street extending approximately 100 feet on either side of the railroad
- only one track crossing at the Sohier Street grade crossing
- the closure of Spring Street, except for a pedestrian-only grade crossing
- the removal of the large boulder at the end of Pond Street, and reconfiguration of the Pond and Spring Street intersections
- the consolidation of the Sestito Lane and Castle Road grade crossings at the Sestito Lane crossings
- the MBTA to provide new fire hydrants and water main extensions as required where public and private grade crossings are closed
- an illuminated advance warning sign on Pond Street, when grade crossing warning system is active
- overhead cantilever warning system where required by the Department of Telecommunications and Energy
- a bell at all grade-crossings
- 410 parking spaces at Cohasset Station off Route 3A
- a new traffic light at the intersection of Route 3A and the station entrance
- a second access road off North Main Street, with no vehicle drop-off spot, and year-round screening of the station from Woodland Cemetery
- the MBTA to provide specific types of fencing along the right-of-way
- MBTA reimbursement of up to $1.2 million spent on James Brook watershed flood control improvements
- MBTA reimbursement of up to $250,000 if the Sohier Street well needs to be replaced
- the MBTA to not use the gravel pits for wetland mitigation purposes
- the MBTA to submit for review and comment the design of various elements of the plans at the 60 percent and 90 percent completion marks
- the MBTA to pat $1 million in exchange for the "friendly" acquisition of the town-owned right-of-way
- Cohasset to temporarily lease areas surrounding the right-of-way during the construction phase of the project

TOM HENSHAW

The Whippet was a semi-popular automobile when I was young and ice covered most of the earth but even then, with a selling price of $495 right off the line in Toledo, it was flirting with the bankruptcy that finally overcame the company in 1955.

At the same time, we were getting around, first with a Ford Model A, then with a Ford V-8, the kind with the headlights between the fenders and the hood.

I thought about Aunt Kate and her Willys-Knight Whippet the other day when I learned that General Motors was closing the book on the Oldsmobile, the oldest auto brand still in production after a run of 103 years.

"Oldsmobile has been under pressure for over a decade," said Rick Wagner, the CEO of General Motors. "In the current environment, we just couldn't find a profitable approach to ensure its future."

There you have it. As recently as 1983, Oldsmobile was the third best selling brand car behind Chevrolet and Ford. Riding on the popularity of its Cutlass Supreme, more Oldsmobiles were sold that year than all Chrysler products combined.

Now, only 18 years later, it's fixing to join Packard, once the Tiffany's of the auto world; and Nash, once treasured by pubescent boys for its seats that broke out into a bed; and, yes, the Willys-Knight Whippet, on history's scrap heap.

In a little while, when you're going about doing the household chores and humming the song "Come away with me, Lucille, in my merry Oldsmobile," your grandkids will look up at you and ask, "Gramps, what's an Oldsmobile?"

That song, the first to honor an automobile, was written in 1905 when Toyota and Volkswagen, two of the most popular cars of today, were hardly blips on the horizon, and three years before Ford came out with the famous Model T.

At the same time that GM was announcing Oldsmobile's demise, Montgomery Ward, the 128-year-old mail order firm we used to call "Monkey Ward," whose catalogue once kept generations of farm and frontier housewives current on the latest fashions, was shut down by its parent firm General Electric.

"You don't need to be an analyst to see that the retail market continues to be very unforgiving," said GE's John Oliver. Thus another American institution bites the dust in the face of competition from the likes of Home Depot and WalMart.

What's next?

Well, at the risk of suborning mass suicide among connoisseurs of liquid refreshment, may I suggest the fabled martini — eight parts vermouth and one part gin straight up surrounding an olive is my favorite.

Alas, the 2000 Best of Guide put out by the Martini Ranch in Chicago named the chocolate mint martini as one of the five best mixed drinks in America, which is a martini spiced with blue curacao liqueur and peppermint schnapps.

"It's just what's unusual and quirky at the moment," comforts Stephanie Teuwen, who organized a chocolate show in New York last year.

Oh, yeah. That's what they said about the Volkswagen and WalMart, wasn't it.

Pols praise deal, vow to fight on Both state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, complemented Cohasset selectmen for hammering out a mitigation agreement with the MBTA, but repeated their belief that restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line is not in the best interest of their district.

"They did what they were supposed to do, regardless of their personal opinions, and that is protect the town" Bradley said of the selectmen. "Their job is to do what they think is best and based on what I know [of the agreement] I know they feel they did."

Hedlund echoed Bradley's thoughts, saying, "The local officials are comfortable with it, based on what I've seen, then I'm comfortable with it."

Cohasset selectmen largely credited Hedlund for the successful outcome of the meetings. In September, Hedlund arranged for the five towns along the Greenbush corridor to meet with Governor Paul Cellucci to air their thoughts and concerns with the project. "Negotiations took on a different air after that meeting," selectman Michael Sullivan said Tuesday night, after the board announced it had agreed to a deal.

Though Hedlund appreciated the thanks from Cohasset, he's looking at the big picture. "In the case of Cohasset I don't have a problem accepting accolades, but for my entire district, it's just a small piece of the puzzle," he said. Hedlund added, "I remain convinced that this project, from a financial and environmental standpoint, is not in the best interest of the five communities I represent."

Bradley, less than two weeks into his first term on Beacon Hill, said he hopes to gain a seat on the House Transportation Committee, which could have enormous influence over the future of the project. If not, he plans on lobbying legislators, and making sure they are aware of the negative impact Greenbush would have on the region. "We're talking about $400 million to take 2 percent of the cars of the road," Bradley said. "When you look at other state projects like the Big Dig, or new convention center the price is going to go up over that." He said with the effects of the new tax rollback plan unsure, he prefers a more "frugal" economic course, and supports spending some of the money instead on improved water and bus service to Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

Town warns of thin ice danger

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

With a cold-snap about to settle upon the region, Cohasset's lakes and ponds are set to undergo the big freeze. Though being able to skate freely, without the constraints of hockey boards is appealing, the danger of thin ice is all too real.

Because of legal liabilities, towns such as Cohasset refuse to declare frozen bodies of water safe for skating, therefore leaving the decision up to the hopeful skaters. Unfortunately, skaters' decisions aren't always the right ones. Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said the town usually gets "two or three" reports of a skater falling through the ice a year. One such incident happened last week, when a Cohasset resident out for an early morning skate on Lily Pond, missed a hole in the ice and fell through.

Town Recreation Department Jack Worley said the only place the town recommends skating is on Ellms Meadow. "The only place we keep lighted and condone skating is on Ellms Meadow," he said, adding because it's not more than 18 inches deep, it freezes easily and won't cause a problem if someone falls through. Worley said the duck pond on Cohasset Common is also popular spot, but that it isn't lighted at night. "During the day it's no problem though," he said. "It isn't too deep either."

When frozen, Lily Pond is a good site, but because of its size and depth, judging its safety is trickier.

"Obviously, if you see any wet areas, or things like that, caution is advised," said Noonan.

Cohasset Police have a web page dedicate to ice safety. It says in order for ice to be safe for skating, it needs to be about four inches thick. Thickness of the ice depends on how many days of below freezing weather the area has experienced, water depth, underground springs, and sunlight.

The website warns people to tell someone if you are going skating, and where. "Remember," the page warns, "if the ice does not look safe, it probably is not."

If someone you know falls through, Cohasset Police recommend:

- don't panic, stay calm and think out what you're going to do
- don't run up to where your friend fell in, you will only become a victim
- use some item from shore to throw to your friend, such as a large branch, rope, jumper cables, skis, a spare tire, hockey sticks, almost anything that you can extend to the victim
- get medical attention, body heat can be lost up to 25 times fast in cold water
- call 911 for help

If you fall in, police say:

- don't panic, turn towards the direction you came from
- place your hand and arms on broken ice surface, work forward by kicking legs. If the ice breaks up try to get on some good ice
- once on solid ice, don't stand up; try to roll away from the thin ice

Police recommend staying away from ice formed over running water, salt water, the harbor, or "any area that had a tidal current."

Cohasset fire conducts ice rescue

Last Wednesday, it was the Cohasset Fire Department that conducted the rescue of a 52-year-old Cohasset man who fell through the ice while skating at Lily Pond. Scituate was the back-up team.

Police officer Rick Yocum was one of the first on the scene. He took a canoe out to the open area and rowed to the victim who held on until the rescue team arrived.

Fire Capt. James Gurry, who was incident commander at the scene, said paramedics Randy Belanger and Rick Covino, donned immersion suits (dubbed "Gumby suits" because of how the suits look) that provide floatation and insulation and went into the water to help the victim who was pulled onto the ice where he was placed on a special sled. Also assisting were fire personnel Tom Finegan, Eric Wenzlow and James Curly. The victim was transported to South Shore Hospital where he was treated and released.

"Everything went well — the police, fire and mutual aid," Gurry said. "It was a team effort."

Village workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the third in a series of four community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village on Tuesday, Jan. 23, at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers Residence.

The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will give a presentation on various design alternatives for such items as new sidewalks, better parking, improved vehicle and pedestrian access, and associated streetscape design alternatives such as decorative lighting, plantings and street furniture. Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm St., (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; Tuesday, from noon to 8 p.m.; and Saturday, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

CHS students get early college nod

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For a dozen Cohasset High School seniors, senioritis can officially start to set in.

The early college application deadline has come and gone, and 12 seniors received early holiday gifts in the form of acceptance letters.

Betsy Anderson, Ben Bixby, Craig Davis, Chris Golden, Tim Grassey, Heath Heinz, John Hertig, Liz Ingber, Doug O'Brien, Clara Sceery, Ashley Ulmer and Amy Devlin, all filled out the forms, wrote the essays and licked the stamps early enough so that they already have an idea of where they will be come September.

"I just wanted to get things over with," said Georgetown-bound Bixby, about his decision to apply for early acceptance. Bixby, Ulmer, O'Brien and Hertig were so pleased with their early acceptances that they skipped out on a few minutes of English to share their thoughts.

"I thought I'd have a better chance of getting in if I applied early," explained O'Brien, who has committed to Trinity College.

"It takes all the pressure off," said Hertig, who received early acceptance letter from not one, but three schools — Perdue University, Penn State, and Rose-Hulman Institute. Though the pressure may be off of Hertig, he still has some more applications to send out, including to Lehigh University, Cornell University, University of Michigan and California PolyTech.

Ulmer received a yes from Tulane University, but said she still wants to apply to 10 more schools.

Out of the four seniors, only O'Brien's acceptance was binding, meaning he has to enroll in that school. But that's not a problem for him, especially when talking to friends. "I'm like 'I'm in college and your still not,'" he joked.

Though they have been accepted, Hertig, Ulmer and Bixby's acceptances aren't binding. However knowing that they are in somewhere takes a lot of pressure off. "It's nice to know you have somewhere to go," Ulmer said, "that there's someone that loves you."

Hertig said with so much going on senior year, it's good to have the college issue resolved.

It also helps that while all their friends are spending their nights and weekends writing essays for the upcoming application deadlines, they are all done.

When asked what the biggest motivation was to get them finished early, they all responded in unison "My parents."

"They're always reminding us to get them done," Ulmer said.

When the applications were mailed in early November, they began the waiting game. Ulmer and Bixby said they were ready to camp out at the post office while waiting for the notification letters to come in mid-December. "Or we were going to take a road trip to the schools and get them," Bixby said.

"You go and get the mail every day," Hertig recalled.

By Dec. 15, the deadline most schools had for notification, Bixby said he'd drive home every day for lunch only to find no mail. "That continued for quite a while," he said.

High School Guidance Counselor Ann Porter said the seniors handled themselves well while waiting for their responses. "As a group goes they've always been organized, and they were pretty calm about it," she said. "As a group, this class has carried themselves very efficiently and they've been that way all through high school. So they handled it as I would have expected."

Though 12 students have their college plans in good order, 59 still have to finish their applications, creating a bit of a crush in the guidance office. Porter piled a foot-high stack of files on her desk as proof. "The pile is still deep, but most are well into the final touches," she said.

On average Porter said, 95 percent of Cohasset High School graduates go on to college.

Stars of the Week

Kristen Sheerin. The Cohasset High gymnast set a school record this week for highest individual score, totaling a 35.15 in the all-around at Tuesday's meet with Hanover. The junior finished first on the floor (9.1), uneven bars (8.7) and vault (8.55) in the record breaking performance.

Growing pains

Young hockey team confounds veteran coach

By Mike Spellman

Dennis Walsh is still trying to figure his young team out.

On Wednesday, the Skippers played defending Division 3 state champion Hanover as tough as anyone has this season— with the exception of strong Division 1 Silver Lake, who tied them at 4-4—taking them inside the final five minutes tied before falling 4-2.

Walsh figured his growing squad would build on this with their next game against a seemingly beatable Hull team on Saturday, but that game wound up in a 3-3 tie, moving the Skippers to 2-4-1 on the season.

"I think we outplayed Hull, but we just didn't take advantage of enough of our opportunities," said Walsh, in his 32nd year walking the Cohasset bench. "The other coaches and I really thought we'd come out of the Hanover game on a high, but we just didn't carry it over the way we hoped."

Walsh has seen a lot of peaks and valleys in his 40+ years of coaching, and he certainly realizes that young teams like his are prone to bouts of inconsistency. He also seems to have a pretty good handle on why.

"Hockey is a game of emotion, and so much can change game to game," he appraised. "It's especially tough to take anything for granted when you've got kids this young."

Cohasset goalie Dan Kinchla was sensational in net for the Skippers last Wednesday, turning back 40 shots against the high powered Hanover Indians, including the one seen here. Unfortunately, it wasn't enough, as the Skippers fell 4-2.

In Wednesday's showdown with Hanover, goalie Dan Kinchla was outstanding between the pipes, turning back 40 Hanover shots, including several true testers to keep the Skippers in the game, a feat made all the more impressive by the fact that the junior had never played goalie in organized hockey before this season.

"He came up big, no doubt," assessed Walsh. "Dan is still inexperienced in some ways, but he's got a lot of ability as a goalie, and he should keep getting better."

Walsh also thought his defense did a good job of supporting Kinchla in the game, keeping the front of the net clear, and not giving up many rebound opportunities to the always opportunistic Indians.

"Hanover is always looking to get a lot of shots on net," noted the coach. "They fire away a lot from the point and look for rebounds and screens, but if you keep the front clear and let your goalie see the puck, you can really cut down on their good opportunities, and I thought we did a good job of that."

The offense also showed some encouraging signs, registering 24 shots against the vaunted Indians defense, two of which got behind goaltender Marissa Hourihan: an admittedly fluky first period goal by Greg O'Connell that gave the Skippers a lead that lasted until 5:25 of the second period and a nifty tally by Tom Anderson at 7:44 of the third period to tie the game.

Take into consideration that Hanover allowed just two shots against a strong Norwell team on Saturday on their way to dismantling them, 5-0, to hand them their first loss of the season against six wins.

"We played a very good all around game," summed up Walsh. "If we'd played the same way against Hull, I think we'd obviously have another win right now."

The Hull game was a back and fourth affair in which neither team ever held more than a single goal lead. Cohasset grabbed the early momentum on a goal by O'Connell, but the wind was removed from their sails quickly when they surrendered a breakout during a promising power play that Hull was able to covert for a shorthanded tally.

Hull and Cohasset also scored once apiece in the second and third periods, flip-flopping the order of the scores. Cohasset tied the game at two late in the second period, and the Pirates returned the favor by knotting the game up for good with just over three minutes left in regulation. Anderson and Chris Caron were the other Cohasset goal scorers.

"I'm hoping the kids saw from that game that they need to come to the rink for every game with the same intensity," said Walsh. "We'll find out if that sunk in soon."

On Wednesday, the Skippers were scheduled to take on 6-1 Norwell.

Swim team breaking barriers

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With a roster of 34, 29 of them female, it's easy to be impressed by the 3-1 record of a Scituate/Cohasset swim team that is facing predominantly male teams.

In fact, the only loss on their record comes with a big asterisk, as the Middleboro coach refused to let the high point totals scored by the Scit/Coh females count against his nine male team.

"We are having a little trouble with the league we are in," admitted first year coach Jamie Kearney. "We are a mixed gender team."

The Scituate/Cohasset men— seniors Mike Camp and Chris Golden, juniors Shawn Sorenson and Brad Marx, and sophomore Bryan Bilton— did hold their own against Middleboro, staying close in the 60-47 loss. If the girls points had been allowed to count, however, the meet would not have even been close.

Seemingly in a league of her own against conference opponents, Garret Jacobucci of Scituate has already qualified for districts and states in the (brace yourselves folks) 50 freestyle, 100 freestyle, 500 freestyle, 100 backstroke, 100 butterfly, and 200 Individual Medley.

Garret, and hopefully some of her teammates as well, will compete in the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association South Sectional swimming and diving district championships on Feb. 15. An even more elite group will participate in the

Cohasset grappler moves down in class, and hopefully up in stature

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Dan Littauer was one of the stronger wrestlers Torin Sweeney has ever seen at 152 pounds.

In the 145 pound division, the Cohasset coach figures his junior captain is simply going to overwhelm most opponents.

"I don't see too many people beating him at that weight," said the veteran CHS wrestling coach. "He can match the quickness and technique of most anyone and he's just incredibly strong for his size."

And apparently he won't need much of an adjustment period. Littauer just recently dropped about four pounds to get down the 145 limit. He made his debut at this weight at the annual Whitman-Hanson Tourney and captured first place in the elite nine man field that included grapplers from local wrestling powerhouses B.C. High, Weymouth, Rockland, Marshfield and the host Panthers.

Littauer faced B.C High stalwart Ben Kinch, a Cohasset native, in the finals, and beat him on points 6-3, recovering from an early take down

Middle School gymnasts get head start

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The brightly lit room is buzzing with activity as more than 20 girls, their hands ghost-white with chalk, work diligently to perfect the routines they'll soon be called upon to perform in competition.

Tuesday night at the South Shore Community Center is buzzing with activity as the undefeated Cohasset/Norwell girls gymnastics team and Cohasset's middle school gymnasts workout together under the watchful eyes of Kara Connerty, Ruthann Ardizzoni and three college students, all former gymnasts, home on winter break.

In years past, it would have been Ardizzoni overseeing the varsity athletes. But after 15 years as the Skippers' head coach, Ardizzoni passed over the reigns to Connerty. Now, Ardizzoni is spending her time running the SSCC's athletic programs with its 275 members, working as a judge at competitions and doing her part in preserving the gymnastics tradition at Cohasset by coaching the 15 seventh and eighth graders.

What Ardizzoni sees in the 14 seventh graders and one eighth grader, captain Nancy Durkin, is plenty of raw potential and several girls who, save for a rule change put into effect two years ago by former principal Curt Collins, would be competing on the Cohasset/Norwell team this winter.

"I'm really glad they're having a middle school program because these girls would have been picked up by other sports and we wouldn't have gotten them back," said Ardizzoni as the evening's workout was drawing to a close. "It's working out really well."

Hoopsters stay in thick of SSL

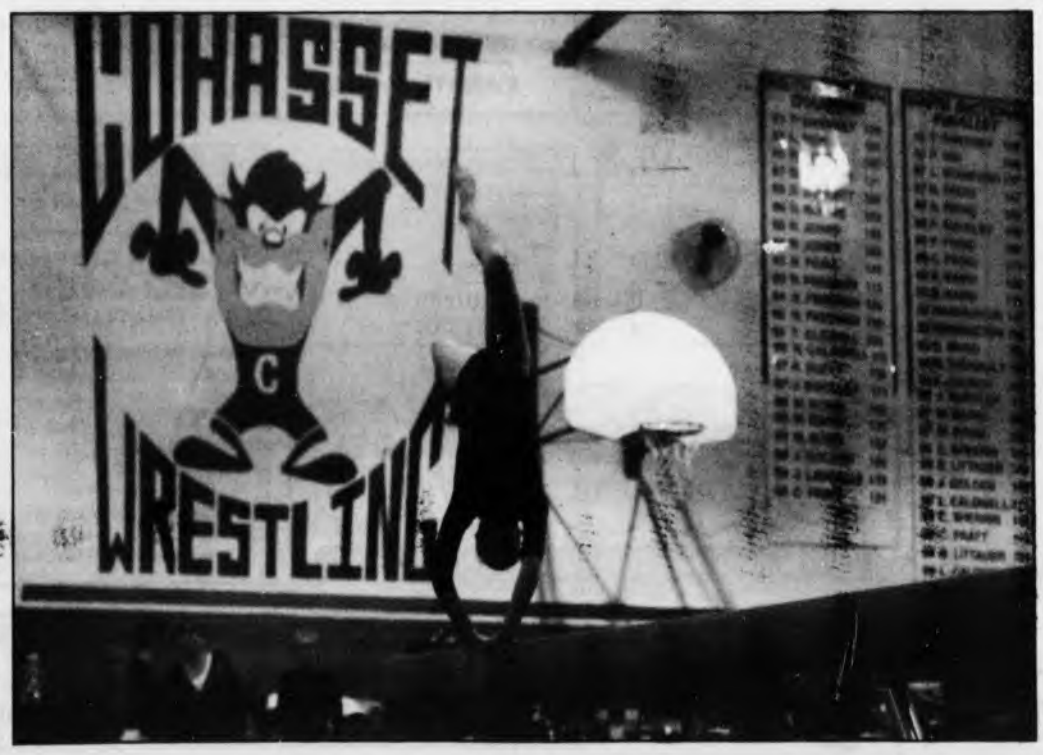
From January third to the ninth, the Cohasset boys basketball team faced three South Shore League rivals in Norwell, Carver and Hull. It was deemed by 10th year head coach Ron Ford to be the toughest week of the season.

The team went 2-1 in that span to maintain second place in what is shaping up to be an extremely competitive South Shore League.



In the first contest, Cohasset edged the Clippers of Norwell in a home game overtime thriller 73-71.

Led by sophomore Gerry Corcoran, who many believe to be the best player in the SSL, the Clippers jumped out to the early lead. Up 21-11 with just under four minutes left in the first half, Corcoran already had 17 points.

But a smooth, unrushed 15-0 run over the next couple of minutes enabled the Skippers to take a 29-27 at the half.

"The kids executed their game plan to a T," reported Ford, delighted with the composure his young team maintained after being jumped and 2-0 deficit.

Littauer comes from a family of wrestlers. Both his father and older brother were grapplers of some repute. He has been starting for Sweeney since he was in the eighth grade at the Senior-Middle School.

"He really is the whole package on the mat," assessed Sweeney. "On top of everything else, he's a very smart wrestler."

In order to fill the void at 152 pounds, Sweeney has asked one of his other top wrestlers, Pat Carbone to flip flop with Littauer and move up into the 152 pound division. The junior recently was Cohasset's top placer at the annual Marshfield Holiday Tourney, taking fifth in the prestigious 22 team event at 145 pounds.

"I don't think Pat will have much of a problem with the transition either," said Sweeney. "He's also a kid who wrestles much stronger than his size might indicate."

The next highest finisher for Cohasset at the Whitman-Hanson event was sophomore Terry Baroudi, who took third place in the 130 pound class, which Sweeney called one of the most competitive divisions in the tourney.

Littauer, Carbone and Baroudi are three of the younger wrestlers Sweeney plans to build around this year for the future. He figures that with grapplers like these, along with a host of fast rising underclassmen and what he calls "a fantastic class" of eighth graders coming aboard next year, Cohasset's program is on the upswing.

"We may have some growing pains this year," Sweeney conceded, "but we're building toward something. Hopefully, we can keep making progress this year, and carry that on into next season."

an option in years past. Seventh- and eighth-grade girls were allowed on the varsity team because, as a junior/senior high school, Cohasset students had the same principal. Collins, according to Ardizzoni, concerned the younger kids would place too much pressure on themselves to perform at a varsity level, split the sports programs at the school between eighth and ninth grade.

With the numbers cut, Cohasset and Norwell merged their gymnastics teams in a move that has been a huge success. The Skippers are currently 2-1, having recorded a score of 125.75 in a recent meet against Pilgrim Conference opponent, Carver. The score is one of the three best in Cohasset High history and Norwell's all-time best.

The middle school program is a minor league of sorts for the gymnasts to fine tune their skills, learn more difficult techniques and garner experience by working with Ardizzoni and the varsity team. Once a week, varsity co-captains Carlie Carter and Kristin Sheerin work with the middle schoolers' floor routines.

"It's working out really well," said Ardizzoni of the program.

Durkin is one of the gymnasts who would be a contributing member of the varsity team this season if not for the rule change. The 5-foot, 105-pound captain is a Level 6 competitor who is working to reach the Level 7 mark this year. High school meets are run using Level 9 rules, but Ardizzoni is confident Durkin would have been a perfect fit for this year's team.

"Nancy would be an asset right now on the varsity team," said Ardizzoni. "Eight of the (middle school) girls would be very comfortable with varsity competition."

Durkin, a year-round gymnast at the community center, seems content biding her time until she is eligible for varsity. She believes working out with the older gymnasts provides a great experience to learn even more.

"You get to see them and how hard they work," Durkin said. "You pick up certain moves and may decide to give them a try."

Strong for her size with toned, muscular biceps and shoulders, the team captain leads the stretching and conditioning phase of the workout and updates the girls on what the team worked on at practice when they aren't able to be there. On this night, Durkin worked on her vaulting and floor routine, her two best events. During competitions, she receives consistent 7.5 – 8.0 scores in both.

As for Durkin's future goals, she is looking to improve steadily and be ready for the 2001-2002 season.

"I just want to do my best and keep moving up the levels," she said.

Like the varsity team, the middle schoolers are a tight-knit bunch in just their second week of practicing together.

"They're working pretty well together," said Ardizzoni. "The camaraderie is definitely there. The girls are learning a lot but it's not a stressful experience for them. We're just trying to teach and get the kids ready."

The middle schoolers will get the chance to compete in an exhibition when Cohasset/Norwell takes on Notre Dame of Hingham, Jan. 16 in a home meet. Three girls in each event will be on center stage after the varsity gymnasts finish their routines. The youngsters will get their feet wet competing under Level 9 rules without the added pressure of a dual-meet setting.

And on Jan. 31, the middle schoolers will have the stage to themselves in an exhibition meet at the community center. Warm-ups begin at 6 p.m. and the meet starts at 7 p.m.

For gymnastics junkies, it's the chance to take a good, hard look at the future of Cohasset gymnastics. Chances are they'll like what they on in the early stages of the game. "Once they calmed down, they played a great game."

The second half was a different story for sophomore sensation Corcoran, as he shot a mere 4-of-15 from the floor.

"Sometimes (Corcoran) can get carried away," conceded seventh year Norwell head coach John Willis. "But he is that talented on offense that I pretty much give him free reign."

Despite the poor shooting second half, Corcoran scored the last five points in regulation with his team trailing 59-54 in the final 15 seconds.

In overtime, Skipper senior captain TJ Bilodeau simply took over, scoring 10 of his 19 points in the three minute period. The most impressive of his shots was a leaning three pointer with a double team in his face with time winding down on the shot clock.

"That is just being a senior captain," said the smiling Ford.

After Bilodeau hit two free throws with under a minute left on the clock to put the Skippers up three, sophomore power forward Ben Lynner, who finished the game with eight points and six rebounds, dumped in two more from the line to put Cohasset up five with 5 ticks remaining, essentially icing the game.

Corcoran then hit an inhumanly cool 40 foot three pointer to add to his already more than impressive statistics.

Leading the way for Cohasset was senior captain Erik Shea, who recorded 21 points to go with his five rebounds and four assists. Freshman center Sean Connelly turned in an impressive performance with six points and seven boards.

Given the intensity of the game, Ford said he was "ecstatic" about the very confident and intelligent way his team conducted itself.

"The bigger the game, the more relaxed you have to be," he asserted.

Two days later, Cohasset faced the very tough, very large Carver team on the road, and fell to the Crusaders, 66-48.

Cohasset was able to hang around with the Crusaders, staying within five points (46-41) with under six minutes left, rattling the team that Ford feels is one of the best Division 3 teams in the state.

"What we lack in size, we make up in skill and athleticism," effused Ford.

Carver's 'twin towers', Tim Ryan and Ralph Frazier, both scored 18 points, leading the way in both the set offense and transition.

Cohasset played another "big game" a few days later, this time against arch-rival Hull, with Cohasset making a late run en route to 75-66 win.

Down 33-32 at halftime, Cohasset moved out in front behind consistent dribble penetration, and slowly began building up their lead, getting it to 13 with two and a half minutes to go.

Junior point guard Matt Bilodeau turned in 19 points, to go along with four rebounds and three steals. Shea, lassoed in the first half with only two points on 1-of-6 shooting, lit up the Pirates in the second to finish the game with 20 points.

Lynner bruised his way underneath, earning himself 11 points and nine boards. On the other side of the paint, Conelly tallied 10 and five. Mixing up his positions, senior captain Doug O'Brien had an unusually high rebound total for his size with 11, while recording four assists, and firing up the crowd with a monster block on transition.

Game Notes

Norwell game:

-TJ Bilodeau had a team high five steals against Norwell, and had recorded at least three in every game up to that point.

-Cohasset committed its lowest amount of turnovers this season with 10, while forcing Norwell into 16.

-Cohasset shot 8-for-10 from the foul line in the first half, 4-for-4 in overtime. Remarkably, the Skippers had no trips to the line in the second half.

-Cohasset held Norwell's talented junior center Ted Hughes, a transfer from B.C. High, to four points on 1-of-4 shooting from the floor.

-Norwell had the Mohan brothers, John and Mike, on the floor at the same time that Cohasset had the Bilodeau trifecta: TJ, junior guard Matt and freshman guard Chris Bilodeau.

Carver game:

-Even odder than the last note of the Norwell game, Carver had all three Fraziers on the floor, Ralph, Mark and Chris, matched up against the Bilodeau threesome.

-Cohasset got to the line a mere three times against Carver, a season low after averaging 20 attempts through their first six games.

-Two of Cohasset's attempts came after a technical foul on Carver. TJ Bilodeau hit one of two, pushing his season totals from the line to 35-for-39.

-Carver coughed up the ball with 29 turnovers in the game, with the Skippers committing 21.

-Cohasset shot 16-of-20 from the line, while the enthusiastic Cohasset cheering section contributed to Hull's 10-of-23 performance.

-Hull shot eight free throws within a 30 second span in the second half.

-Cohasset, finishing the game with an impressive seven turnovers, did not commit one for the first 13 minutes of the second half.

-The first half marked the only half Cohasset has played this year without hitting a three pointer.

-Cohasset's eight point lead with 5:36 left in the game was the highest since Hull went up 11-4 just under five minutes into the game.

Swim team breaking barriers

MIAA state competition held on the 25th of that month.

Kearney was able to mention a few more of her girls who she feels would have made a profound difference on the score.

Amanda Turner, who finished third in the summer league championships despite a migraine, Holly Graham, Sarah Dugan, Megan Marr, sisters Elizabeth and Catherine Noonan were among the names on the list.

"Our girls compete very competitively with all the boys, usually winning a majority of the races," said senior co-captain Golden of Cohasset.

Kearney also sang very high praises for Cohasset freshman Delia Regan for her admirable level of dedication. Her times, the coach asserts, have benefited all of this hard work.

"She's got a beautiful stroke," said Kearney of Regan, the 1999 winner of the coveted Mark Nourie Delaney Memorial Award for the Cohasset Swim team, an award given to an outstanding athlete with great leadership qualities. "No matter what is going on with her, she just does the practice and gives it her all."

Regan, competitor in the 200 freestyle, cut her time from a 2:59 at the beginning of the year to a 2:49, and gunned down that personal best with a 2:39.88 against Middleboro.

"About two weeks in, I looked in the pool, and she's leading the pack!" laughed Kearney.

With all the female talent, the gender barrier has not been a problem for the Scituate and Cohasset swimmers.

"They are very mature young adults," explained Kearney, a Scituate native. "There is no problem between Cohasset and Scituate, and there is no problem between boys and girls."

Previous to the match up against the Middleboro Sachems, Sci/Coh pitted themselves against North Quincy, romping 99-75. Before that, the Sailor/Skipper squad defeated Cardinal Spellman 83-68. Cohasset has five dual meets left, all against conference opponents in Barnstable, Taunton, Duxbury, Nausett, Sharon and Sandwich, the last of which takes place on January 31.

With their last available practice on Jan. 30, Kearney has posed a very reasonable question: Where does the team practice for the All-Conference meet (Feb 9), districts (Feb 15) and states (Feb 25)?

Already, the team has to practice at the less than convenient Weymouth MDC Pool, and can only get there three times per week.

"It is very difficult to deal with the limited practice time, combined town team and distant practice site," said Golden, who has managed to keep a positive attitude despite the hardships. "But it also brings the team together."

Kearney gives her entire team a lot of credit for sticking with the sport, despite the lack of funds and facilities, saying: "They study on the way home on the bus. These are kids who are truly committed. It was so hard to get this going this year, and they are really committed to making this work."

POLICE BRIEFS

Teens arrested on alcohol charge

Police arrested four teenagers after finding beer in their car in the early hours of New Year's Day morning.

The officer on patrol observed the vehicle fail to grant the right-of-way to another car at Jerusalem Road and North Main Street at about 1:15 a.m. on Monday, Jan. 1.

After the traffic stop, further investigation revealed a 12 pack of Bud Lite on the rear floor and an open can of Bud Lite under a coat between the two occupants in the back seat. Police, who stepped up patrols over the holiday weekend, said the teens were headed home.

Charged with minor transporting alcohol were the driver Phillip P. Aucion, 19, of Chelmsford; and passengers, Matthew P. Schmidt, 19, of Markham, Ontario; and Cohasset residents Brad Powell, 19, of 16 Stanton Road, and Corey Sullivan, 17, of 21 Gammons Road. The teens were arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court and were all placed in a diversionary program during which they must attend a Mothers Against Drunk Driving workshop and pay a $50 fee to MADD. The arrests won't appear on their records, police said.

Sign up for Police Academy

The Citizens Police Academy sponsored by Cohasset police starts Feb. 5.

Classes will be conducted from 6-9 p.m. once a week for nine weeks. Curriculum includes criminal and constitutional law, court procedures, probable cause and elements of crimes, motor vehicle law and accident investigation, firearms and use of force, patrol procedures, traffic enforcement and community policing. Ride-alongs with police officers may also be included.

Applications are available at the police station on Elm Street.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said there is no charge for participants. The estimated $3,000 cost of conducting the academy that may include some overtime to cover shifts is being paid for through a state grant earmarked for community policing services.

The class size at the academy is limited to 12 people, age 16 and older. Noonan said police hope to get a cross-section of teenagers, parents and senior citizens.

lanes violation and operating a motor vehicle without headlights. Petty and Repogle were arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court with a pre-trial conference scheduled for Feb. 16. The juvenile was arraigned yesterday (Wednesday).

The doughnuts and bagels that are dropped off in the early morning deliveries are protected in shrink wrap, police said. Bernie McShane, owner of the Donut Shop, said doughnuts are usually dropped off about 1-1/2 hours before the shops open. He said missing doughnuts have been a problem.

"This past summer was the worst," said McShane, whose shop makes deliveries across the South Shore. "Sometimes other stores in the area, like Tedeschi's help us out or we have to ask for a key."

McShane speculated the thefts were more like a prank.

"Kids see them out there. I'm sure newspaper deliveries and bread deliveries have the same problem," he said. "Who knows what they do with the doughnuts? — Eat some, throw some."

Noonan, the Cohasset chief, said all the evidence was donated to Father Bill's, a homeless shelter in Quincy.

Although Mary Lou's sells other baked goods such as muffins and coffee cake – for some people, there is no substitute for a doughnut.

"Nothing really replaces a doughnut if you really want a doughnut," said Sandry of Marylou's.

At the Cohasset shop customers noticed the lack of doughnuts Sunday morning.

"One of our customers relies on a plain doughnut," said Amy Litchfield, cashier. "He just bows his head, shakes it and walks out."

Beth Rusznak at the North Scituate shop said customers were understanding.

"We usually sell a lot of doughnuts in the morning," she said. "But once you explain the story, people understand."

OBITUARIES

Joseph Dooley Sr.

Joseph R. Dooley Sr., 76, of South Dennis, died Jan. 7, 2001, at his home unexpectedly.

Mr. Dooley was born and educated in Boston.

He was the son of the late William F. Dooley and Margaret (Burke) Dooley.

He enlisted in the U.S. Marine Corps on Jan. 20, 1942. He served with the Marine Corps. in the South Pacific. After being discharged, he returned to Boston where opened a real estate and property management company. He later worked as a property and real estate manager for several banks in the Boston area.

Mr. Dooley had been a resident of Hyde Park, Canton, and Cohasset.

He retired in 1990, and moved to South Dennis from Cohasset in 1993.

He was a communicant of Our Lady of the Cape Church in Brewster, The Marine Corps League Cape and Islands Detachment, and a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post in Cohasset.

He leaves his wife, Roseann (Flannagan) Dooley (they married on June 5, 1948, in St. Paul's Church in Cambridge), seven children, Richard J. Dooley of Atlanta, Ga., Jean E. Wagner of Scituate, Dennis M. Dooley of Cohasset, Joseph R. Dooley of Cohasset, Maryanne D. Grady of Sandwich, Thomas E. Dooley of Cohasset, Kevin E. Dooley of Cohasset; two brothers, Edward Dooley of Daytona Beach, Fla., John Dooley of Dedham, three sisters, Rita Keohane of Stoughton, Mary Fitzsimmons of Daytona Beach, Fla., Katherine Harrington of Needham; 13 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren and many nieces and nephews.

A funeral Mass will be held on Jan. 12, 2001, in Our Lady of the Cape Church, Stoney Brook Rd., Brewster at 1 p.m.

Interment in Massachusetts National Cemetery, Bourne will be on Jan. 12 at 3 p.m.

Spiritual talk

Cynthia Alyce Neely

Please join Cynthia Alyce Neely for a spiritual talk entitled, "Freedom That lasts" at Old Ship Church Parish House on Main Street in Hingham, Monday, Jan. 15, at 4 p.m. This talk is presented in response to the growing public interest in spirituality. Neely will focus on how we can discover our true identity and understand our divine rights as the children of God. This understanding brings equality, mutual respect, and appreciation for each other into our every endeavor. It also enables us to enjoy each other's diversity..

In her talk, Neely will also discuss Mary Baker Eddy her book "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures." Neely describes it as a book that will help you find spiritual solutions to the challenges that face each of us every day, including parenting and relationship problems, lack of equality in the workplace, issues surrounding the mind/body connection, poor health, and troubled finances.

Science and Health, written more than 120 years ago, was chosen by the Women's National Book Association as "one of 75 books by women whose words have changed the world."

Neely will also discuss how the healing and regeneration she has experienced in her own life are possible for everyone to achieve.

Alpha course

Alpha, a ten session course to examine contemporary, spiritual questions will be offered weekly on Wednesday evenings by St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. beginning on Wednesday, Jan. 17 at 6:30 p.m. Dinner is served to begin each class. There is no cost. "What can I believe in," and "Where is the meaning in life?" are vital yet difficult questions. Alpha helps participants explore them for themselves. Tough, skeptical questions are taken seriously. Alpha is the first letter of the Greek alphabet and signifies the importance of seeking first things first. New understandings are found in topics such as: "Who is Jesus?" "How and Why Do I Pray?" "Does God Heal Today?" There is plenty of humor and good food, opportunity to get to know others who also may be questioning and to make new friends. One participant wrote to say: "Thank you for allowing non-members of St. Stephen's to attend. I truly enjoyed the fellowship and felt I had made new friends." For more information or to register, call Saint Stephen's Church at (781)383-1083 and ask for Jane or Cliff.

Monday evenings with the rabbi

At Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, Rabbi Stephen Karol will teach a course Monday evenings entitled "Does Archaeology 'Prove' the Bible Is True?" This course will answer such questions as: "Do history and the Bible contradict each other?" and "Are science and faith in conflict with each other?" In this course you will read about specific examples of archaeological discoveries that may or may not support what we read about in the Bible. These will include the location of the Garden of Eden, where Abraham started his journey to Canaan, and what life was like for our ancestors in Egypt.

This class will meet from 8 to 9:15 p.m. Jan. 22, 29, Feb. 5, 12, and 26. There is no fee for this class; members and non-members are welcome to attend.

To get more information, sign up for this course, or get directions to Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, call (781) 749-8103.

Scituate flick at a video store near you

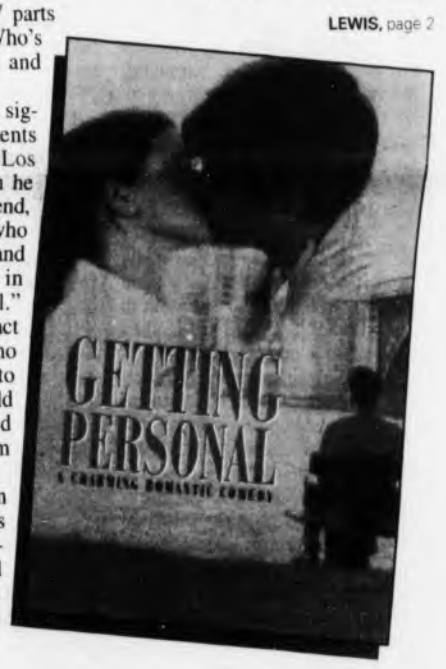
By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

By day, Michael Lewis works at Olson Global Markets in Hingham, but in his spare time, one of the things he's good at is talking about funny movies.

He also likes writing, producing, and acting in them.

Lewis, 39, of Weymouth, is riding high lately on the success of a film he wrote and shot in Scituate two years ago. The independent movie now known as "The Mysterious Death of Kelly Lawman," has made it to the shelves of local Hollywood Video stores and is even getting regular slots on pay cable stations including HBO and Cinemax. Showtime is expected to begin showing the film in the near future, Lewis said.

If you don't find "The Mysterious Death of Kelly Lawman," at the video store next time your in, ask for "Getting Personal," the other name given to the movie.



"The film is under two different titles right now," Lewis explained. "We changed the name for the (Hollywood Video) store because we found out that dramas tend to rent better." But Lewis noted on the cable stations and on Amazon.com, the film is listed as "Getting Personal."

While the packages are different the two films inside are the same.

Whatever the name of the film may be, the fact is "Getting Personal" once again puts Scituate on the map and the small screen. While the 1987 film the Witches of Eastwick featured scenes of Scituate Harbor and the Quarterdeck gift shop, "Getting Personal," was mostly filmed in Scituate, at the Egypt Beach home where Lewis summered as a child and where his parents make their year-round home now. The movie was also partially shot in Boston.

"The movie is a romantic comedy about two women who are renting a summer home in Scituate," he said. "They find a stranger on the sundeck one day, and one of these women falls in love with him. However, the stranger finds that he is unable to become intimate with her because of something in his past."

Although "Getting Personal" was released in 1998, it never made it to public theaters in America—just Europe. But despite not making it to the big screen in the U.S., Lewis' film received accolades from critics at the Seattle Film Festival, the Austin Film Festival, and the local Woods Hole Film Festival.

> "No one hired me in Los Angeles so I hired myself in Boston."
> -Actor Michael Lewis

"In a sense, the video release of the film is the debut here in the United States," Lewis said, adding he's been getting some good feedback from various people who have seen the film.

"It's a comedic love story," Lewis said. "If people who see it get a couple belly laughs while they're watching it, that's good enough for me."

The Dedham native's interest in films dates back to his college days at UMASS Amherst where he studied both English and drama. Lewis began experimenting with writing screenplays as a student and decided to make a go of it in Los Angeles in the mid-1980s.

"While I was in Los Angeles, I got a job as the playwright-in-residence at a theater called Los Feliz Playhouse," Lewis said. "I had some good reviews on a couple of my plays and I started doing some bit TV parts on shows like 'Who's The Boss?' and 'Growing Pains.'"

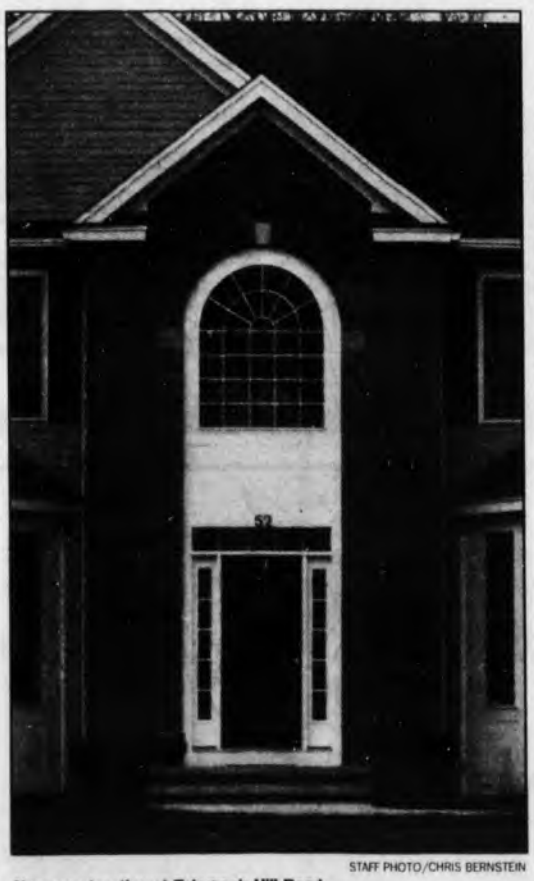
One of the most significant moments Lewis had in Los Angeles was when he met his good friend, Michael Landes, who would eventually land the lead role in "Getting Personal." Landes was in fact the person who inspired Lewis to turn a 10-year old script he penned into his first film screenplay.

After a decade in Hollywood, Lewis had become disenchanted and returned to his native New England where he took a very different career path — the insurance game. But it wasn't long after he returned and was working at Northwestern Mutual Life in Boston that his old pal Michael Landes called him looking for a new script.

"He kind of just said 'Do you have any plays lying around?,'" Lewis said. "A month before (Landes) called, I had pulled out this one script I had written years ago—I ended up handing that one over to him."

When Landes read the script, he called Lewis and said he should really think of turning it into an independent film.. Lewis got a group of investors together, and made the film now known as "Getting Personal" for $500,000.

"It was about 30 days of shooting," Lewis said. "Ten of those days were spent filming in Scituate, and everyone in that community was so great to us." He said Scituate residents "put crew and cast members up," and he noted local businesses like Mickey's, Mullaney's Seafood, and Morning Glory Bakery frequently provided cast and crew members with good eats.



"We all had a blast," Lewis said.

"Everything turned out great,"

For Claudia Phillips and her husband, Tom, the only house that will do for them is a new house.

"We're shopping for our third house, and it will probably be our last house, or at least until we retire," said Phillips.

"So I really want the house of my dreams. We've lived in apartments, rented houses, and we even remodeled the home we're in now. But I always pictured myself living in a brand-new home," she said.

Phillips said she likes the idea of starting fresh with a home. "I want to be the one to choose paint colors, light fixtures and appliances instead of living with other people's choices," she said.

Pastel artist has eye on the sky in new show

By Seth Jacobson
SJAC@BSO@CNC.COM

Marshfield resident Margaret Farrell Bruno, has a knack for painting with pastels.

The North River Arts Society (NRAS) member is currently showing her works in an exhibit at the Ventress Memorial Library gallery in Marshfield. The show runs through Feb. 3 and is being sponsored by the NRAS.

"The show opened on Dec.9," Bruno said of the Ventress exhibit. She added the show consists of 15 of her pastel paintings featuring clouds.

"I've always had kind of a love affair with clouds," Bruno added. "A lot of the paintings that are being featured at the show were done last summer, which a lot of people remember as dreary. But from a creative standpoint, last summer was great for painting clouds."

Bruno said even though the theme for the current art show is clouds, her paintings feature more than just what's up in the air.

"Clouds are just an aspect of the paintings," she said. "Some of the paintings are just about clouds, but other paintings focus a bit more on the landscapes." Bruno said many of the paintings in her vast portfolio feature local South Shore-based scenarios, but she also has paintings based in pastel-friendly places like Nantucket.

"You can really capture amazing sunsets on that island," she said. Bruno added she's been getting some good feedback from her current show, and what's more, some of the featured works have already been sold. But Bruno is no stranger to artistic success—she has been an artist her whole life and she's been exhibiting her

Puttanesca made right

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

We've all had puttanesca sauce, that feisty, working-man combination of tomatoes, garlic, capers, anchovies, olives, chopped parsley, and olive oil. It can be blue collar cooking at its best but — barely cooked raw ingredients which fill the mouth with assertive pleasure — but, in this country, it is often no more than a wan tomato sauce dressed up to feel important.

The basic recipe calls for cooking anchovies, garlic, and red pepper flakes in olive oil, then adding the chopped tomatoes, simmering, and then finishing up with chopped olives and capers. The first issue I addressed was the olive oil. Only extra-virgin will do since anything else is too mild. Among supermarket extra-virgin oils, however, there is a lot of difference and I suggest an oil with a lot of bite in the back of the throat such as Colavita.

Since really good fresh tomatoes are virtually impossible to find most of the year, I started off with canned tomatoes, using Muir Glen Diced Tomatoes, the brand which won one of my blind tastings a couple of years back. (If you cannot find diced tomatoes, purchase the "ground" variety. Progresso is a good alternative choice to Muir Glen.)

The only other ingredient which bears some thought is the olives. Forget about making this sauce with a can of Libby's sliced and pitted olives. In my opinion, they have little flavor. Instead, use a high-quality brine- or oil-cured black olive such as Kalamata. I also tried green olives but did not care for the flavor. Finally, I found that I preferred garlic which was crushed in a garlic press to minced garlic since it had less of a tendency to burn and turn bitter. (It is also easier to use a press.)

Now the big issue was the cooking itself. Over the years, I have found most tomato sauces to be superior when cooked quickly except for those cooked with meat. This recipe is no exception. However, the cooking times for different ingredients turned out to be key. I liked the flavor best when the anchovies, garlic, and red pepper flakes were briefly sautéed in the olive oil. The anchovies break down, becoming mellow, the garlic does not have time to become bitter, and the pepper flakes lose their harsh bite.

Next, I added the diced tomatoes and let the sauce simmer for 20 minutes. Finally, I added the olives and capers, two ingredients which taste better when cooked for only a few minutes. With longer cooking, they tend to take over the sauce. Salt is almost optional since many of the ingredients are already salted but a good grind of black pepper is highly recommended.

20 MINUTE PUTTANESCA SAUCE

The two most important ingredients in this recipe are the diced tomatoes and the olives. Tasteless, canned olives just won't do.

3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
3 medium garlic cloves, minced or pressed
4 anchovy fillets packed in olive oil, chopped
1/8 teaspoon red pepper flakes
1 28-ounce can diced tomatoes Muir Glen or Progresso preferred
2 tablespoons drained capers
1/4 cup pitted and coarsely chopped brine-cured Kalamata olives
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 pound pasta
1/4 cup chopped fresh parsley

1. Heat olive oil in a medium saucepan or skillet. When hot add the garlic, anchovies and red pepper flakes and cook until the garlic is sizzling and aromatic but not browned. Add the tomatoes (and of course their liquid) and let the mixture come up to a simmer. Cover and cook for 20 minutes. Meanwhile set a large pot of water (about 1 gallon of water and one tablespoon salt) over high heat to boil.

2. When the sauce has cooked 20 minutes, add the pasta to the water. Meanwhile, uncover the sauce, stir and add the capers and olives and simmer uncovered for an additional 5 minutes. Taste for salt (you may not need any) and add several grinds of black pepper. Turn off burner under skillet, cover, and keep sauce warm. When the pasta is ready, drain for 30 seconds without shaking in a colander, and then place back into the cooking pot. Add the sauce and toss to combine.

3. Serve immediately, topping with the chopped fresh parsley. Serves 4

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10

Gear up for an exciting, upbeat day. The Cancer moon becomes inactive at 7:39 a.m. until 7:44 a.m., when it enters playful Leo. The planet Mercury moves into Aquarius at 8:26 a.m., remaining there until February 1. The planet Jupiter now stands at 1-degree Gemini, and the applying Mercury/Jupiter alignment generates an optimistic mood. It makes this day ideal for launching new ventures, and it highlights all communications, study, travel. Go for the gold.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11

The combination of a Leo moon and Mercury/Jupiter alignment prompts you to get an early start to this day. You can be most productive this morning. Plan to finish projects already begun rather than starting new ones. A lunar opposition to Uranus may bring unexpected distractions, obstacles in the afternoon. At 10:08 p.m. the moon forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Saturn and becomes inactive. Meditate for inner peace and clarity.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12

The moon enters Virgo at 7:26 a.m., traveling there today and tomorrow. In this period, Mercury, Virgo's planetary ruler, aligns with Neptune. This influence is ideal for developing creative projects. Follow your intuition and imagination. On the other hand, this is not a favorable time for making long-term decisions or commitments. You may not have all the facts of the matter.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13

A lunar alignment to Pluto may spark emotional fireworks this morning. Don't rock the boat. As the day goes on, potentially stressful influences ease up considerably. All creative endeavors get the green light; art, music, dance, photography, crafts. Mercury and Neptune align at 5-degrees of Aquarius at 8:10 p.m. The Virgo moon aligns with the sun and Saturn until 11:12 p.m., when it becomes inactive. In addition, the sun forms a harmonious contact to Saturn in the early morning hours. Plan a quiet evening; spend quality time with friends and loved ones.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 14

The moon enters social Libra at 9:05 a.m. and forms harmonious contacts to Jupiter, Neptune and Mercury. Visit or entertain friends; get in touch with people you haven't heard from in a while. This day rates high for new starts of all kinds.

MONDAY, JANUARY 15

A Libra moon continues to place the focus on relationship/partnership issues. The green light remains on for new beginnings, particularly in your personal life. If you have been experiencing problems with another, now is the time to work out difficulties. Be willing to see their point of view; forgive, forget and start anew. Channel your passions and dynamic energies into creative or romantic outlets.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 16

It may be difficult to get back to your daily business routine. Allow extra time to get where you are going. At 7:35 a.m. the last quarter phase of the moon occurs, and the Libra moon becomes inactive. Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, prepares to form major alignments to Pluto and Mars. Don't take risks. Secret schemes or hidden agendas will most likely backfire. At 2:02 p.m. the moon enters intensive Scorpio. Stay busy with work projects; review, redo, repair, reorganize. Back off rather than stir up resentment.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17

A Scorpio moon today and tomorrow may generate stormy emotional weather. Don't force issues. Keep a low profile. On the other hand, the Scorpio moon brings a time when you can be most productive and get big work projects out of the way. Take on a busy schedule. Today the moon aligns with Mercury at 11:55 a.m., Mars at 5:20 p.m. and Venus at 5:53 p.m. Plan a quiet evening. Look within, and you will find what you need to get back on track.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18

A lunar opposition to Saturn warns you to wake up in a good mood this morning. Others may be moody and difficult to get along with. Although this is not a great day for socializing, it is one of the best for getting things done. An applying alignment of Mercury to Pluto aids projects that need problem-solving. Tackle jobs that have been difficult and troublesome; you can work out the glitches and find new solutions. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain new awareness and find inner peace. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 8:44 p.m. until 10:35 p.m., when a Sagittarius moon takes over.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19

An applying 90-degree alignment of Mercury/Mars impacts this day. Slow your pace. Sidestep irritability. Think before you say or do something you will later regret. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until tomorrow. Stay busy with odd jobs, chores and errands. The moon continues to travel in Sagittarius. The sun moves into the sign Aquarius at 7:16 p.m., remaining there until February 18.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20

Storm clouds move out, and sunny astrological weather arrives today. The combination of a Sagittarius moon and sun/Jupiter alignment generates high energy, optimism, enthusiasm. You can launch important ventures between 5:00 a.m.-1:18 p.m., when the moon becomes inactive. The day is best, however, for enjoying favorite hobbies, sports, friends. Go with your adventurous side. Spur of the moment ideas can be the most successful. Be a free spirit; follow your bliss.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21

The moon enters Capricorn at 9:57 a.m. The planetary ruler of Capricorn, Saturn, is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for direct travel on Wednesday, January 24. Focus on responsibilities you have taken on or commitments you have made; now is the time to follow through. An applying alignment of Mercury to Uranus urges you to keep an open mind; be willing to experiment with new ideas, techniques. This influence is great for troubleshooting, brainstorming.

Yesterday's advice pertains to today as well. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. Hard work will pay off. The moon continues its travel in Capricorn, and a Mercury/Uranus alignment culminates at 2:35 p.m. A lunar contact to Mars makes this a great evening to burn the midnight oil catching up on work projects or studies.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 23

Hard work, self-discipline, attention to duty continue to be principal themes today. Rather than worrying about situations that are out of your control, focus on matters you can do something about. Repay debts, fulfill promises. Make up a list of things to do and stay busy. The Capricorn moon aligns with Saturn at 10:38 a.m. and becomes inactive. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 10:43 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius.

Landes said of the experience. "(Lewis) has a way of creating great dialogue in movies. He's very charming and witty with words."

Landes who has the lead role in the movie is keeping busy these days acting in a new UPN series called "Special Unit 2," which will premiere in March. He also has a role in an upcoming film called "Heart's War" starring Bruce Willis.

Lewis said he's working on some new material, but his day job at Olson Global Markets keeps him pretty busy. He also enjoys spending a lot of his time with his son, and his wife Elaine.

"I love my job and so I'm definitely happy doing what I'm doing," he said. "But I have a script in the works called 'Eguys,' which is about all these dot com fiascoes. It's a combination of 'Swingers' and 'Glengarry Glenross.' I actually have about another half-dozen scripts I'm working on."

Lewis said he'd love to write and produce another independent film because he loves the artistic freedom involved, something he didn't really have in Hollywood.

"It's a funny thing," he said. "Everyone always says how Los Angeles is the place to go to get involved in the film industry, but I was there for a number of years and I couldn't get involved in it at all. No one hired me in Los Angeles so I hired myself in Boston."

Jig-Punk comes to town

Prodigals rock Company Theatre January 13

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The Prodigals are not the first band to combine Irish/Celtic folk traditions with punk rock's raw energy. But as the band is ready to launch its national tour for 2001, it just might be the first to take that hybrid sound and carry it to a mass audience.

The tour kicks off in our own backyard on Saturday (Jan. 13) at 8 p.m., as the Prodigals will rock the house at Norwell's Company Theatre.

When we're in the process of writing and arranging songs in rehearsal, it's very free and loose and almost no-holds-barred as far as experimenting with sounds and rhythms. And we look for and find places where Irish folk traditions can blend with rhythms found in West African, Indian and punk music.

Prodigals lead singer Gregory Grene

Since the mid 1980s, Irish bands such as the Pogues, Black 47, the Saw Doctors and, occasionally, even hit rockers U2 have creatively fused the whimsy and fire-in-the-belly passion of traditional Celtic music with the stripped-down, sonic power of punk. But the Prodigals, a New York quartet with American and Irish roots, are the first "statesiders" to jump into the ring of Celtic rock, although singer, accordionist and main songwriter Gregory Grene prefers to describe his band's sound as Jig-Punk.

Grene also emphasizes that while those other bands and more like them have tended to play their music from a modern rock/pop perspective with Irish influences with mixed results, the Prodigals' approach has come from the other way around: Irish/Celtic music with modern influences. And the band even ventures a step further, exploring rhythms of current dance music and hip-hop and even world music, blended into a sound that's still distinctly Irish.

"We're not trying to get away from or downplay the Irish elements in our sound," said Grene from his band's rehearsal studios outside New York.

"I think that's pretty obvious in the music when you listen to our record. Rather, I think we're broadening the basic Irish/punk sound by exploring the energy, especially the rhythmic energy, inherent in the music, and finding a new vocabulary for it overall. We think it's just a natural outgrowth of the music."

Prodigals lead singer Gregory Grene

"Bands like the Pogues approached traditional Irish music from a modern angle, and took the sound further than anyone else had at the time. But they probably didn't explore rhythms like we try to do. When we're in the process of writing and arranging songs in rehearsal, it's very free and loose and almost no-holds-barred as far as experimenting with sounds and rhythms. And we look for and find places where Irish folk traditions can blend with rhythms found in West African, Indian and punk music. But the music always starts out from a solid Irish/Celtic base, something very strong and specific, so it's not all just arbitrary jamming," Grene said

The Prodigals will perform at The Company Theatre on Saturday, Jan. 13 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $23 in advance and $26 the day of the show. For tickets or information call the theater at (781) 871-2787. The Company Theatre is located at 30 Accord Park Drive in Norwell.

The Prodigals include: Gregory Grene — vocals and button accordion; Ray Kelly — vocals and guitar; Brian Tracey —drums, backing vocals; and Andrew Harkin — bass. The Irish band will perform this Saturday night (Jan. 13) at Norwell's Company Theatre.

Spirit of Community

Help us recognize a South Shore high school student who has answered the call of community service. Fill out the ballot on page 9 and tell us about a young teen who you know stands out in a church group, or volunteers at a local soup kitchen or maybe serves as a peer leader or mentor for younger children. Those who are selected will be featured once a month in the newspaper. Send you ballot forms to Mark Skala, 165 Enterprise Drive, Marshfield, 02050; or you can log on to our website at www.townonline.com and fill out the form on line.

Customers say quality service is most valuable in buying process

By Carol Bulman, President Conway Financial Services

Call it overload from the hustle and bustle of the holiday season, but in searching for a topic for this article, I found myself thinking about the less tangible aspects of our business rather than the usual topics of home finance.

Carol Bulman

Some of the typical column subjects include:

What constitutes my closing costs?

Have government agencies come up with anything new for our customers?

What about our first-time homebuyers – is there anything creative for them?

"I was treated well and my questions were answered honestly."

"The person who took care of me was professional and caring."

"The process went very smoothly and this meant a lot to us during a very stressful time in our lives."

"If not for the people who worked on my loan, we wouldn0t be living in the house of our dreams today."

As a mortgage broker, we are in the service industry. We are only as good as the last word we say to a customer, the last first-time buyer we helped into a home, the last frustrated homebuyer whose fears we helped alleviate.

To be good in this business, you have to believe each day that you are instrumental in helping a person achieve the American Dream of home ownership.

It sounds corny, but it is true that our customers expect the old-fashioned rules of good service. When it comes down to it, as much as we have all become reliant upon the Internet and computers, it0s the personal touch and emphasis on superior customer service that makes the difference each day and sets some companies above others.

So, as we look to the New Year with renewed enthusiasm, we at Conway Financial Services are looking to the ideals that have built our success and that our customers have come to depend on: honest and respectful treatment, fairness in our business practices, admitting our mistakes when we make them and good old fashioned kindness.

I just finished reading a group of questionnaires that were completed by our recent customers following the purchasing of their homes, and I began to see a trend in what customers are really seeking.

But instead of these areas, my attention was attracted to the things that our customers want and deserve – a professional attitude, honest and ethical conduct, and superior customer service.

I just finished reading a group of questionnaires that were completed by our recent customers following the purchasing of their homes, and I began to see a trend in what customers are really seeking.

In those surveys, which are sent to each customer and personally reviewed by Conway executives and managers, there were very few comments that referred to the interest rate, the mortgage product, the number of mortgage types that we offered or how great our computers were.

Instead, the majority of the comments focused on the quality of service. Comments included:

"He answered all of my questions."

"My mortgage loan was a complicated one and she was very patient throughout the process."

It sounds a little like the book "Everything Important that I Learned I Learned in Kindergarten" doesn0t it? But it is basically the truth that we want to be treated as we have taught our children to treat others.

I leave you with a wish for a happy and healthy New Year, and a promise of another year of quality treatment by the staff of Jack Conway & Co. and Conway Financial Services.

IN BRIEF

Kristen Davey Schwartz

Schwartz named top lister

Kristen Davey Schwartz recently was named top lister for the month of December in Jack Conway & Co.'s Scituate real estate sales office.

Schwartz, who joined the company last year, also completed the "Conway College of Real Estate Knowledge," an intensive, two-week education program that provides licensed agents with advanced instruction in the practical aspects of selling real estate.

A Scituate native, Schwartz is active in the Wampatuck School PTO and the South Shore Hospice Annual Golf Tournament. She holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and was formerly a senior project consultant/financial analyst at BankBoston. Schwartz lives in Scituate with her husband, Paul, and three children: Erika, Michael and Julia.

Founded in 1957, Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. is the largest privately owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

Sale of Scituate Harbor building

George Jamieson of Conway Commercial recently brokered the sale of a landmark building on Front Street in Scituate Harbor. Jamieson represented the seller, Leslie Charney, and procured the buyer, D&J Harbor Trust, in the $350,000 transaction. The 3,368-square-foot building is located at 116 Front St., in the heart of Scituate's business district.

The Trustee, James Burke, is a well-known Boston chef who owns and operates the Tuscan Grille in Waltham and Tullio's in North Quincy. After renovating the property, Burke reopened the former restaurant space as "Riva" and plans to add a new pub in the spring of 2001. The restaurant features fresh Italian entrées and fine wines.

Conway Commercial is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. Founded in 1957, Conway is the largest independently owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The organization recently was named the 77th largest realty company in the United States by REALTOR® Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

Jamieson brokers lease of space in Braintree

George Jamieson of Conway Commercial recently negotiated the lease of office/warehouse space in Braintree to Mahon Communications Corp., a leader in voice and data communications systems.

Jamieson represented the tenant in the lease of 20,800 square feet at 163 Bay State Drive. Peter Quinn of Quinn Associates in Brockton represented the landlord, Apparel Realty Trust, which owns the newly remodeled 170,000-square-foot office/warehouse facility.

Jamieson said Mahon Communications had outgrown its South Boston offices due to the company's recent growth. The firm selected its new home because of the availability of office and warehouse space, competitive lease rates and the site's proximity to Boston and Routes 93 and 128.

Conway Commercial is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company.

Fagan receives award

Maureen Fagan, a Broker and an owner with RE/MAX By the Sea, recently received the Executive Club Award for excellence in sales.

Fagan, a resident of Eastham, has more than 18 years of real estate experience. She has been affiliated with RE/MAX By the Sea for the last four years and serves the mid- to lower-Cape Cod area. Fagan has achieved her Certified Residential Specialist (CRS) and is a Certified Buyer Representative (CBR). Currently serving as treasurer for the Women's Council of Realtors (WCR) for Cape Cod and the Islands, Fagan was the 1999 WCR Member of the Year.

"We are proud to claim Maureen Fagan as a member of our team at RE/MAX of New England," said William Soteroff, executive vice-president and regional director of RE/MAX of New England. "The success of our organization is a direct reflection of the contributions and commitment she has made to the real estate industry and to RE/MAX."

Buyers want spacious kitchens, family rooms

are particularly interested in the Telegraph Hill subdivision in Marshfield, where the newest phase homes are selling for around $500,000.

"What I really like about the new homes I'm seeing is how well they're thought out. The layouts, the room sizes really fit my family's lifestyle," she said.

Phillips said she likes the big, open kitchen and family rooms that are being built now. "The house I'm in now has a big formal living room which we hardly use, and a small kitchen where we always seem to pack ourselves into," said Phillips.

"I'm not a formal person, so I would prefer a house with a smaller living and dining room and the rest of the space given to the real living areas of the home - the kitchen, family room, mud room," she said.

The Phillipses are not alone in their home wish list. According to Paul Lariviere, vice president of development sales for Jack Conway Realty, the trend in new construction is less formality.

"We're seeing less square footage in the formal living and dining rooms and more in the kitchen and family room areas. Those rooms are very open and spacious," he said. Demand is high for lots of storage space and at least two, and more often three-car garages.

"There's a lot more custom building going on right new because land costs are so high, the builders don't want to take a chance (on building speculation homes,)" said Lariviere. "So we're really seeing a trend come directly from the consumer."

Nancy Virta, an independent marketer for Indian Pond Estates in Kingston, said homeowners have become more particular about their surroundings in the kitchen, too.

"People are not concerned anymore only with how their formal rooms look. We're seeing a lot more granite countertops in the kitchen, top-of-the-line appliances, tumbled marble floors and backsplashes. The kitchens in the newer homes are just beautiful," she said.

Indian Pond Estates, built around a golf course, is in its fourth phase. According to Virta, 40 house lots went on the market 18 months ago and only 12 to 14 lots are left. Prices start at $669,000 and go right up to the $1 million mark.

The homes are custom-designed, with several home models to choose from. Most have three-car garages, bedrooms with private baths, big master suites and a first-floor office or study.

"The living room is not the most important anymore, but in this price range, people do want a formal room for entertaining," said Virta.

Lariviere said because land costs are so high in the shoreline towns right along Route 3, more new development is springing up inland, near Lakeville and towns in that area. "That whole corridor is where the open area is. Coastal developable land is few and far between," he said.

Because of that, lot sizes for new homes are often relatively small, according to Lariviere.

"Lot sizes are definitely getting smaller. Land costs are so high, so homeowners would rather put the money into the interior. Most buyers these days are dual-career couples with little time for yard work, anyway," he said.

For those considering a new home, one of the most important considerations is the reputation of the builder, according to experts. Talk to homeowners who live in a recently completed home.

Homeowners' associations are a good source of information because they would know of any common complaints about a particular builder.

In addition, real estate agents may be familiar with different builders. Though they may not have sold new construction homes, they may have resold homes by builders in their area and be familiar with the quality of work.

Fleet Mortgage and CRS to serve homebuyers

Fleet Mortgage, the leading provider of residential mortgage loans in Massachusetts, and the Massachusetts chapter of Certified Residential Specialists (CRS), a local realtor affiliate group consisting of the top income-producing real estate professionals in the state, have announced an alliance to serve the needs of homebuyers in Massachusetts by offering their combined services in real estate purchase transactions.

Homebuyers who work with a CRS and then obtain their mortgage loan from Fleet Mortgage are entitled to $200 off-closing costs, in addition to receiving expert service from real estate agents who rank among the top five percent of all realtors performing residential sales nationwide.

"As leaders in our industries, Fleet Mortgage and CRS know that you must seek innovative solutions and provide superior service to satisfy customers' home-buying needs," said Stephen W. Doran, regional vice president of retail lending for Fleet Mortgage. "Through our professional alliance, we are committing our combined expertise to deliver our customers a dynamic service experience."

"From the home inspection to the loan closing, homebuyers often consult with real estate professionals for guidance in obtaining transaction-related services," said Meli Morash, Massachusetts CRS Chapter president. "Consumers who turn to a certified residential specialist should be confident that they're working with a realtor who is knowledgeable about the marketplace; and, should they choose Fleet Mortgage for their home loan, they will benefit from a more expeditious loan process thanks to a staff of designated underwriters assigned to assist CRS brokers and their clients."

Fleet Mortgage, headquartered in Columbia, S.C., is a FleetBoston Financial company. A national leader in the origination of residential mortgage loans, the company provides mortgages through retail offices in the Northeast, a national network of 1,000 correspondents, wholesale brokers nationwide, and its National Telesales Center. As a national leader in mortgage origination and servicing, Fleet Mortgage's $150 billion servicing portfolio comprises more than 1.5 million customers.

FleetBoston Financial is the eighth largest financial-holding company in the United States. A $179 billion diversified financial services company, it offers a comprehensive array of innovative financial solutions to 20 million customers in more than 20 countries and territories. Among the company's key lines of business are: retail banking, with more than 1,200 branches and nearly 3,400 ATMs in the Northeast; commercial banking, including capital markets/investment banking and commercial finance; investment services, including discount brokerage; and full-service banking through more than 250 offices in Latin America. FleetBoston Financial is headquartered in Boston and listed on the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE: FBF) and Boston Stock Exchange (BSE: FBF).

The Massachusetts Chapter of Certified Residential Specialists was chartered in 1982 and now counts as its members approximately 600 experienced realtors statewide. Only one in every 20 realtors has the advanced training, experience and commitment to carry the CRS designation.

The Martin Peaks House

For the true antique lover, the Martin Peaks House, a Federal-style Cape, combines the character and charm of yesteryear with all the amenities of a modern home. Both the living room and dining room have wide pine floors and beautiful working Rumford fireplaces. The first-floor master bedroom has a beamed ceiling, bowed, scalloped fireplace, and a new private master bath. The gourmet eat-in kitchen opens to a family room with a beamed cathedral ceiling. A spacious second bath is found on the first floor. An authentic morning staircase leads to two additional bedrooms on the second floor. A three-season room overlooks the beautiful large lot with perennial gardens and a new septic system. An open house will be held Sunday, Jan. 14, from 1 to 4 p.m.

Pastel artist has eye on the sky

For more information on Bruno's current show call the Ventress Library at (781) 834-5535 or the North River Arts Society at (781) 837-8091. To e-mail Bruno in order to commission paintings, contact her at caperajaca@aol.com.

work professionally since 1988.

"I show my work at the Christopher Gallery in Cohasset all the time," she said. "And I actually just finished a show at the Ellison Center for the Arts in Duxbury." Bruno has shown her work throughout much of the state, and even in critical art-based cities like New York. She is also frequently commissioned by various people to draw individual portraits and given landscapes.

"I started drawing when I was very little," Bruno said. "I remember having do a book report. My teacher told me to illustrate it, and I did. I ended up having a ball, and I've loved drawing ever since then."

Bruno grew up in Scituate, and attended college at the Pratt Institute in New York. She graduated in 1979 with a bachelor's degree in fine arts.

"That was the best place to go to art school," Bruno said of her New York experience. "It really forced me to grow as an artist. That city has a lot to offer art-wise."

During her college experience, Bruno experimented artistically with other paint mediums, but her love of painting with pastels out-did her love of painting with anything else. However, she said she sometimes uses watercolors as "sort of a primer" for her pastel pictures, and she's currently trying to work more oil paints into her repertoire these days.

Bruno returned to the South Shore after college, and moved to Marshfield in 1984.

"I had my one of my first shows (at the Ventress Library) when I moved to Marshfield and joined up with the North River Arts Society," she said. "A year ago, another member of the society suggested I do another show there. I said 'I'd love to.' I really love exhibiting there, because you can pick your own themes. In this case, I picked clouds."

Art is now a full-time job for Bruno, but she still manages to work some nights at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth. Her life keeps her busy, but she said she never tires of rising to the challenge of creating a great painting.

"When I'm working on paintings, I'm always looking for a challenge creatively," she said. "I'm always happy to use pastels in different ways. I think pastels are just wonderful because they are so luminous and colorful."

And even though most of her paintings at her current show focus on clouds, Bruno is no stranger to other kinds of landscapes whether they be city-scenes, seascapes, or portraits of people.

"I get my ideas in various ways," she said. "Sometimes, I just go and paint on-location, and sometimes, I get ideas just by driving around and seeing what's out there. Sometimes, a painting just happens."

Q. Can you give me any advice on how to get from Venice to Paris without paying $904 to fly 500 miles? The train trip takes longer than I really can spare, so I'd like to fly. I will be there in mid-May and have tried Air France and Alitalia.

A. I tried pricing that route in mid-May on Travelocity.com and came up with just $400 round-trip on the major airlines, so I'm not sure why you were quoted over twice that much. You could also try Europe by Air (1-888-387-2479 or at www.europebyair.com). They quote that route on Alitalia at $242 round-trip in mid-May.

Q. Concerning the reader who had tickets on Air Aruba, which went bankrupt, and has put the charge for them in dispute with his credit card company: the federal Fair Credit Billing Act requires that consumers who don't receive something they've charged to their credit card get their money back from the credit card company if they put the charges in dispute within 60 days from the time the charge appears on their bill.

The FCBA states "if a creditor determines that a billing error has occurred as asserted, it shall ... correct the billing error and credit the consumer's account with any disputed amount and related finance charge or other charges, as applicable."

Regardless of whether the credit card company can collect from Air Aruba or not, the consumer is entitled to get his money back and Visa is required to eat the loss because Air Aruba delivered nonconforming goods. I'm an attorney who practices a lot of consumer law, so that's why I know a good deal about this type of issue.

A. You're indeed correct that federal law requires credit card companies to reimburse consumers if they dispute charges for goods not received within 60 days. Consumers should write to the creditor at the address given for "billing inquiries," not the address for sending payments, and include name, address, account number and a description of the billing error.

Yet, when I called this reader's Visa issuing bank (Chase), they insisted that they were not liable to act as an "insurance" agency for a bankrupt airline. I called my own Visa card issuer, Citibank, and was told the same thing. I even called the FTC hot line and this was confirmed.

Then, I called the public relations office at the FTC and spokesman Howard Shapiro confirmed that the FCB Act still stands. But, it appears that most credit card companies don't want to provide correct information to their customers, which I find appalling.

Q. We'd like to rent an apartment in London this summer. We're a family of four and we'd like something central, near public transportation. Can you recommend a reliable company?

A. Barclay International (1-800-84-6636 or www.barclayweb.com) is a good place to start your search. They offer hundreds of London apartments by the night or the week, at a wide range of prices. To cite one example: they list a two-bedroom apartment sleeping five people at about $2,000 per week in central London.

Q. My mother is 83 years old and would like to visit our daughter in Osaka, Japan. I'm afraid that the long plane ride would be difficult for her. She has both internal and external varicose veins and normal airplane travel would be very painful. She would need to keep her legs elevated much of the time, plus be able to walk around.

Is there a way for an airline to accommodate my mother, without great expense?

A. It is, indeed, a long trip in economy class, especially for someone 83 years old. You could either break the trip up, in Hawaii, for instance, or buy her a business-class seat.

Ticket Planet (ticketplanet.com or 1-800-799-8888) sells business-class seats from the United States to Osaka for $2,200 round trip. I think it would be a wise investment and would not recommend that she travel in economy, although you should consult her physician in any event.

Winter survival tips for gardeners

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

As I gaze out my window on this bright, but chilly winter afternoon, I long for the advent of spring. I try to recall the beauty of the lush, green, summertime landscape overflowing with its glorious floral display, but the vision is fleeting. The reality is that the ground is covered with a light blanket of snow as meadows and gardens display lifeless twigs poking up through the crystalline snow cover. The brilliant colors of summer and autumn are only a memory and spring is still many weeks away.

For many gardeners, the winter months can be a depressing time of year. Once the gardens have been put to bed, the last of the leaves composted and our tools and containers cleaned and stored, we are temporarily grateful for a break from our gardening chores of mowing the lawn, dragging the hoses or those endless hours spent pulling weeds. This sense of relief is often short-lived, however, as we grow increasingly restless and feel a nagging desire to be out-of-doors working in the garden again. Although the hustle and bustle of the holiday season often alleviate this melancholy feeling, once January arrives, many gardeners experience the winter blues.

January is a month for gardeners to dream! Our mailboxes are overflowing with catalogs for seeds and plants and the covers of gardening magazines remind us of the beauty resting beneath the frozen ground. This is the month to research new plants, plan new gardens and order from those tantalizing catalogs. Perched in my windowseat, I delight in the acrobatics of the birds and the squirrels at my feeders as I begin my wish list of seeds and plants. Evenings may find me snuggled up in a blanket with a stack of new gardening books as I dream of spring and the greening of the landscape.

In recent years, due to the continuing popularity of gardening, many local nurseries have broadened their inventory, offering unusual and exotic varieties of plant material in addition to a wide selection of perennial favorites. For those gardeners who have the time to browse through garden centers during the growing season, extensive and diverse collections of plants and shrubs are available. Unfortunately, many of us have very little leisure time and would prefer to spend this time working the soil, so catalog shopping or purchasing seeds, plants and supplies over the Internet better suits our hectic lifestyles.

For many gardeners, the winter months can be a depressing time of year.

There are dozens and dozens of excellent catalogs. Improved technology has enabled even hobby gardeners to include color pictures in their brochures and on their Web pages and the growing number of sources for plants and supplies is staggering. Many of these catalogs serve as excellent reference material providing detailed descriptions and cultural information in addition to sensational photos. The catalog format allows suppliers to present significantly more varieties than those generally listed in standard reference books which makes many catalogs inexpensive alternatives to costly reference books and worthy additions to a gardening library. Even if you prefer to select plants from your local nurseryman where you can observe the plant already growing in a container, browsing through catalogs can help you to compile a substantial wish list of plants to seek out when warmer weather finally arrives.

Many gardening magazines such as Horticulture and Fine Gardening provide forms in their publications which enable you to order many catalogs at once through the magazine, although there may be a cost for the individual catalogs. Seek recommendations from other gardeners for reliable mail order sources. If you know members of garden clubs or plant societies, they can usually provide great advice or refer you to another gardener who can offer suggestions, particularly if you are interested in a particular family or group of plants such as wildflowers, daylilies or iris.

The acquisition of any product by mail can be a gamble and when dealing with live plants, there can be considerable variability. When plants are purchased locally, a gardener can readily observe the health and quality of the plants but mail order plants tend to be shipped as dormant roots and rarely match the glowing descriptions and glorious photographic illustrations in the catalogs when they arrive. If you decide to order from an untried source, place a relatively small order initially which will enable you to judge the quality of the plants they provide. You can always place a second order if satisfied.

Be sure to specify a shipping date when ordering plant material so plants arrive at a time when you can deal with them. Avoid delivery dates near to an anticipated vacation, during a time when you expect to be especially busy or when the weather is not appropriate for immediate planting.

When extended periods of frigid weather necessitate indoor activities, seek refuge in the beauty of gardening books and catalogs. Picturesque landscapes, colorful beds and borders and enticing new perennials will make the hours fly by. Despite the winter wonderland outside, spring will seem just around the corner.

Greenbush deal draws mixed reviews

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

"Just thrilled."

"Nothing short of outrageous."

"Delighted."

The town's announcement that it hopes to sign a mitigation agreement deal with the MBTA at the end of this month, has drawn — surprise surprise — mixed reaction from the pro- and anti-train people in Cohasset.

Last week, after many months of discussions, selectmen said it had agreed in theory to a mitigation package that could be worth as much as $3.5 million to the town. Though a public meeting will be held on Jan. 30 to discuss the deal, Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said it would be tough for the town to reopen negotiations with the MBTA, and hopes to be able to sign the deal that night. He did say, however, both last week and Tuesday night, that if the town feels major issues have not been addressed in the agreement, the door was still open slightly for more talks.

But not open enough, says Peter Pratt, whose Ripley Road property borders the Greenbush right-of-way. "When this was released to the public, the message was, 'We're ready to sign this,'" he said. "Speaking personally, I think the selectmen kind of rushed to judgement [by saying that]. It's nothing short of outrageous, particularly to those who are direct abutters."

Pratt, a former selectman, strongly criticized the negotiating process, and the end result, saying the deal "does not protect the rights of the

Users want water rate hike doused

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

In upcoming weeks, Hingham, Cohasset and Hull will continue a joint effort to aggressively fight a 16 percent rate increase proposed by Massachusetts-American Water Company.

Officials and residents from all three towns voiced their staunch opposition to the request at a public hearing held by the department of telecommunications and energy at Town Hall on Tuesday.

"No service is more basic to us than water," said Hingham selectman Katharine Reardon. "We can't choose to not turn on the tap, although we can decide how much water we want to use."

Calling the rates the three towns are paying "extraordinary," Reardon urged the department of telecommunications and energy to apply the "greatest diligence possible" to its examination of the rate hike request.

Cohasset Town Counsel Richard J. Hucksam said that community is against the rate increase and will participate fully in the review proceedings alongside Hingham and Hull opponents.

The water company, which serves customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset, applied to the department for the increase last November.

Town debating $11 million Little Harbor sewer project

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Tuesday night was a meeting of the boards, if not the minds.

The Board of Selectmen, Board of Health, Water Commission and Sewer Commission all convened in Town Hall to examine the latest sewer feasibility study of Little Harbor.

Though two studies had been done before, this one, conducted by Stearns and Wheeler of Burlington, was designed to be the final word in whether the area could and should be sewered.

The answer is yes, but at a cost.

The engineering group placed a price tag of near $11 million on the possible project, that would bring sewer service to 275 Cohasset homes in the Little Harbor watershed area.

However, the project is not without options. Stearns and Wheeler representative Wayne Perry, who made the presentation to the boards, said if all 275 homes joined the system, 120,000 gallons of wastewater a day would be created. Perry said the town could either create a separate waste-water treatment facility to deal with it, expand the existing plant off Elm Street and send it there, or a combination of both.

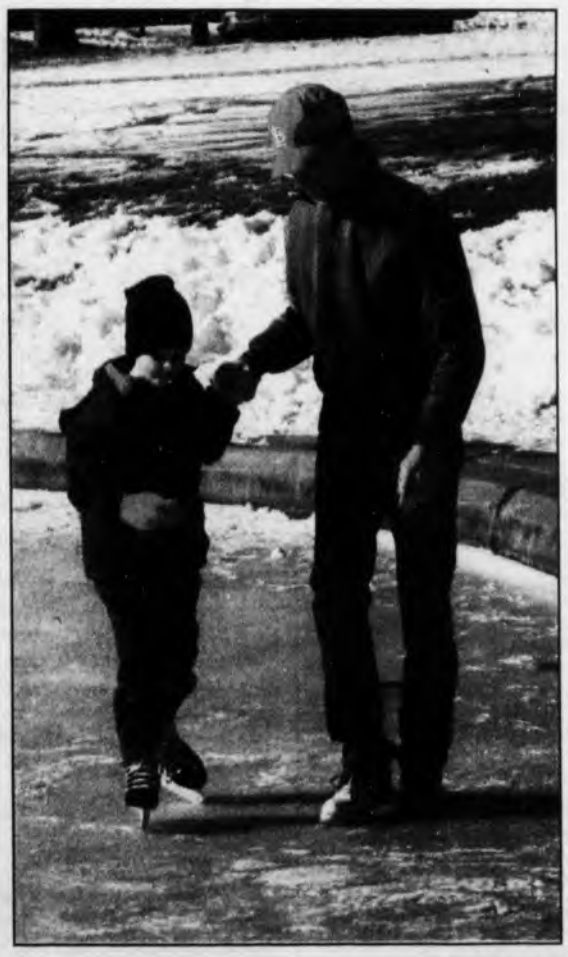
Perry said his company went through a lengthy review process of the project, including a review of existing data, and evaluation of collection systems, treatment technologies and possible site locations before devising a plan.

He said a grinder pump system, similar to the one in North Cohasset, would be ideal for the area. Land surrounding Little Harbor, like in North Cohasset and other places around the town, is mostly granite ledge, and installing normal gravity lines would include blasting out part of the ledge, making it cost prohibitive.

"I want to see the town do this, because the town wants to. Not because a bunch of bureaucrats looking for something to do, wants us to. We need to be in charge and not fall on our knees every time the state says 'Boo.'"

— Ray Kasperowicz, sewer commission

With grinder pumps, wastewater would be collected in a basin before being forced out into the main sewer line by a pressure pump. What happens with it then, is a question to be decided at a later date. As of now, Sewer Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil said the Central Cohasset wastewater facility is treating as much wastewater a day as possible. However, he did say it would be possible, with the proper permitting, to expand the current plant within the same footprint, from 300,000 gallons of water per day, to 420,000 — possibly enough to cover the Little Harbor system.



But Stearns and Wheeler also raised the possibility of sending some of the new system's wastewater to a new plant, ideally built at the gravel pit site off North Main Street. Water Commission Chairman John McNabb objected to the site location, saying it was too close to the public watershed area. A smaller treatment facility could be built on the south entrance lawn of Wheelwright Park, Perry said.

The lawn, along with the Town Common, is being looked at as a "big leaching field" for the treated wastewater. Selectman Michael Sullivan said he was "uncomfortable" with the idea of using the Town Common for that purpose.

If the Elm Street facility was to be expanded, Vanderweil said nearly $500,000 would have to be spent in additional environmental impact reports for the Department of Environmental Protection. The

County land plan favored

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

This spring Cohasset voters will have the chance to create an open space preservation fund — but it won't be the Community Preservation Act.

"The money is already being collected but we'd get it back rather than it going into the state coffers."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

At the annual Town Meeting, voters will be asked to back a plan being pushed by the Norfolk County Advisory Board that would divert some $8 million a year in county deed excise taxes from the state general fund to the 28 cities and towns in the county for the purchase of open space.

In Cohasset's case, the Norfolk County plan could add up to about $145,000 annually.

The county plan would be a better alternative to the state Community Preservation Act

School board OKs tougher graduation requirements

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset High School graduation requirements are about to get tougher.

Starting with this year's freshman class, Cohasset High students will be required to pass more classes in order to receive a diploma.

"In light of a review of our mission statement and student learning expectation guidelines, our graduation requirements are much less than in the standard district," high school principal Dr. Michael Jones told the school committee Dec. 21. But he added the changes would not place an additional onus on students because in actuality, they "far exceed" the existing requirements.

"I don't think it's a significant change. What we have on paper has to agree with what we expect."
— Michael Jones, CMHS principal

The new requirements will call for students to take and pass three years of science and math, as opposed to two, and one year of fine arts and a foreign language.

Jones characterized the move as "90 percent a paper adjustment," and will help during the school's upcoming accreditation review. "I don't think it's a significant change. What we have on paper has to agree with what we expect," he said.

Jones said the move had the support of the various department heads.

He also said the requirements weren't among the toughest because the state is moving towards performance based standards. "Massachusetts is saying it doesn't matter how many years [of a subject a student takes] as long as they meet certain standards," Jones said.

Pay as you throw program to start July 1

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After a year of planning, the Pay-As-You-Throw program at the Recycling Transfer Facility will kick off July 1.

Starting May 1, residents will be able to purchase an RTF sticker for $50, along with either 30-gallon trash bags for $1 apiece, or two 15-gallon bags for $1. Residents must use the bags — that will be available in bundles of ten — to dispose of their trash..

Selectman Merle Brown, who has worked closely with the town recycling committee on the program, said the bags will be available at stores around town.

The RTF sticker will also double as a beach sticker. Instead of paying for a beach and RTF sticker separately, residents will be able to pay $50 for both. However, if residents choose not to use the RTF, they can still purchase a beach sticker for $7.

The PAYT program was adopted at last year's annual Town Meeting in an attempt to force residents to recycle more. Scituate implemented a similar program two years ago and Town Manager Mark Haddad, a Scituate resident, said the recycling rate in that town has increased significantly.

A pamphlet explaining the program in detail will be sent out to residents soon.

The RTF will still accept small plastic bags, such as bread bags, filled with household garbage only, such as food scraps, for no cost. There is no charge for disposal of recyclable items.

Brown said a pamphlet explaining the program in detail will be sent out to residents soon.

In other RTF news, Brown reported that a load of trash was rejected by SEMASS in Rochester for high radiation levels last month. The load was trucked back to Cohasset where it sat for four weeks until the radiation dissipated. Brown said the cause of the radiation was unknown but could have possibly come from trash disposed by someone undergoing cancer treatments.

However, while the radiation was dissipating, a second trailer was knocked out of commission when its removable wooden floorboards froze. As a result, while the trailer was being thawed out, only one trailer was available and that soon filled up.

Brown thanked RTF volunteers Sharyn Studley and Carol Martin for spending hours breaking down corrugated cardboard during the space crunch.

Hagerty bids come in high

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Champagne in Hagerty Property Committee Chairman Russ Bonetti's house has been put back on ice for the moment. After seven years of planning, permitting and persistence, the town appeared ready to move forward with the creation of a water-front park on the site of the former Cohasset Colonials furniture manufacturing company. With permits in hand and $225,000 in itspocket, the town sent out bids for the project that would create 27-space parking lot, public access to the water, and a wooden walkway to Government Island.

But why should the bidding process be any easier than the permitting process which ate up a majority of those seven years?

Six bids were opened up last Thursday morning in the Selectmen's Office, and all bids came in higher than the $225,000 allocated for the project.

"They were much higher than what the estimates were," said Bonetti. "The lowest was in the $265,000 range."

Town engineer John Modewleski had estimated the project would take about $175,000. Bonetti said the bids went as high as $490,000.

"Either the bid numbers weren't accurate or I don't know what," a glum-sounding Bonetti said afterwards.

Last October's Town Meeting allocated $175,000 for the project, with the committee throwing in $50,000 from its own coffers. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Hagerty Committee would probably have to go back to Town Meeting and ask for at least an additional $75,000 to just cover the low bid, submitted by RAD Corp. of Hingham, and any additional contingencies that may arise.

Haddad did say RAD Corp agreed to hold its bid until the Town Meeting, March 31.

Bonetti said another option would be begin the project, but scrap plans for a public dock and pier. "We never thought we'd see a dock down there anyway," he said laughing. "We should have enough to finish without that."

The Hagerty Committee will next meet tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall.

Triad to meet

The next meeting of the Cohasset TRIAD Program will be held Wednesday, Jan. 24, at 9:30 a.m. at the Cohasset Elder Affairs Center, 3 North Main St.

TRIAD's goal is to increase the quality of life and safety for all seniors, but the meeting is open and all citizens are welcome.

Litchfield to stay

Town Manager Mark Haddad was happy to announce that Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield will remain on the job for another year.

Litchfield, 66, had wanted to retire as of this spring, but after a "lot of arm-twisting, begging and pleading" from Haddad, he changed his mind. "And I think that's great," Haddad told selectmen last week.

Foster care, lottery litter lead state senator's agenda

Hedlund backs range of new bills

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If state Sen. Robert Hedlund has his way then the rights of foster parents will come to the forefront during the new senate session on Beacon Hill.

And that's just one of a range of more than 80 legislative initiatives the Weymouth Republican is backing this year. Other highlights include Title 5 regulations, a redemption program for used lottery tickets, electoral college reform, open space acquisition, obtaining money for pond dredging and the ability of non-custodial parents to gain access to their child's education records.

Moved by the story of a couple in Hingham who lost custody of their foster child, Hedlund filed legislation for the new senate session that would require the Department of Social Services to begin proceedings to terminate rights of the biological parents whose children are placed in foster care at birth when that child reaches six months.

"It seems to me that we as legislators have a responsibility to at least question the system when it shows a pattern of failing the frailest among us," Hedlund said. "My goal in presenting this legislation is to force the Department of Social Services to become more accountable in situations where the best interests of the child are not being adequately being considered."

A separate bill would provide proof the Department of Social Services has notified foster parents of all court proceedings affecting the child placed in their care. "This is a simple courtesy that should be extended for people serving in this important role," said Hedlund, who said he has been inundated with e-mails from foster parents willing to testify on these potential reforms. A third bill would increase the compensation rates for Foster parents.

Hedlund, who represents the eight-town Plymouth-Norfolk District, has also filed legislation that would address litter caused by used lottery tickets.

"A pet peeve of mine is pulling up to a convenience store and seeing a carpet of used lottery tickets on the ground," he said.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund would like the legislature to enact a lottery ticket redemption program that could put an end to lottery litter.

The bill would require creation of lottery ticket redemption program so people could exchange ten used, non-winning tickets for a new ticket. State Treasurer Shannon O'Brien has been resistant to the idea because she thinks it could cause problems for vendors, Hedlund said. As a "fall back" position, Hedlund filed another bill that would let the treasury department study the feasibility of the program.

Title 5, the state code governing septic systems, continues to be an issue of concern in the district that spans the coastal towns from Weymouth to Duxbury, Hedlund said. "I represent the hardest hit district in the state with the highest cost of repairs," he said about the impact of Title 5.

Hedlund said there has been a big push at the State House over the past five years to take local control away from the local boards of health and implement an enforcement code statewide.

"I've opposed that because philosophically, I always support local control and I also think what works in Scituate may not work in Longmeadow," he said. But in some towns, like Hingham, the board of health has enacted more stringent regulations on septic codes than the state's — causing alarm among homeowners who feel that the regulations are too onerous.

"Some towns have implemented more stringent septic codes that may go beyond health concerns and tread into land-use policy," Hedlund said.

The bill, that has been adopted as a legislative priority by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors, would require that any board of health regulations that go beyond Title 5 be approved by a vote of Town Meeting or City Council.

Prompted by a Weymouth constituent who persuaded him to take a closer look at the Electoral College question during the presidential contest in Florida, Hedlund backs some reform to the Electoral College in a bill that has a number of co-sponsors on both sides of the political aisle at the State House. This bill would mirror the process in Maine and Nebraska by allowing the electors of each of the ten congressional districts to cast their votes for president and vice president of the political party that received the largest number of votes in their particular district. The state's two "at-large" electors would cast their ballots for the president/vice president receiving the most votes in the state. Currently, all 12 Massachusetts electors cast ballots for the winning ticket statewide. A similar bill has been filed in the House.

"The interesting thing about this is that it would not contradict the intent of the framers of the Constitution," said Hedlund, who is opposed to doing away with the Electoral College.

Hedlund is sponsoring a bill aimed at towns that may decide not to adopt the Community Preservation Act, which involves a tax increase. "Some towns may not go for that," he said.

Hedlund contends the more affluent towns, which will likely adopt the Community Preservation Act, are already doing a good job with open space. "The Hulls and Weymouths can't avail themselves of this program," he said.

The new act would allow towns to establish a separate fund to purchase open space and give them the discretion about how to provide money for the fund.

Ponds and lakes need dredging but state funding is usually earmarked for bigger projects such as harbor dredging and seawalls, Hedlund said. In some areas, plant species that are not native to the pond or lake are squeezing out other aquatic life and plants. This bill, which was "re-filed" from last year would require the state Department of Environmental Management to have a separate line item in its waterways budget for smaller projects and award funds based on the merits of the project.

"This would set up a line item and criteria by which not only towns but entities like the Whitman's Pond Association in Weymouth could apply for the funds directly," Hedlund said. Successful applicants could also get technical assistance.

Hedlund is one of several legislators to file bills — that have support from environmental groups — reestablishing a zero percent interest program for the state revolving loan fund for sewer and water projects. The bill would delete the outside section of the fiscal 2001 state budget that ended the zero percent interest program.

"I have the greatest of interest in this being my district is hit hardest by Title 5," he said. The administration raised the interest rate to 2 percent.

"Two percent can make or break a project for the smaller communities doing smaller projects," Hedlund said. Several towns in the district are extending or plan to extend sewer service and would be greatly impacted by the added interest, he said.

Strengthening the rights of non-custodial parents is the focus of another bill filed by Hedlund in response to concern expressed by a local constituent over what he had to contend with to gain access to his son's education records. The bill changes the current requirements non-custodial parents must comply with to certify their eligibility to obtain information about their children's records. This bill would allow for a one-time written request by the non-custodial parent to the school principal for access to the child's records. Safeguards include notifying the custodial parent of the request and preventing access to information when a court order is received by the school principal. The bill also requires school systems designate a staff member to oversee proper implementation of the new standards.

Hedlund would like cities and towns to have control over setting local speed limits. Currently that power lies the Mass. Highway Dept. The bill filed is in response to issues raised in Minot, a section of Scituate, and Pine Street in Weymouth, over speed limits. "This bill is consistent with my philosophy of local control," Hedlund said.

Another Hedlund-sponsored bill would close the loophole allowing the Department of Telecommunications and Energy (DTE) to override local siting decisions on cell towers. To accomplish this, the act would remove wireless service providers from the definition of public service corporations.

Unions, town agree

The town has reached collective bargaining agreements with two of the town's unions, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. Both the town's police and clerical unions agreed to a three-year contract with the town, effective July 1, 2001. Both groups will be getting living increases of 3 percent this year, 3 1/2 next year, and 4 percent in 2003.

Haddad commended both groups for recognizing fiscal difficulties and negotiating in "good faith" with the towns. He specifically cited his negotiations with the police union and union head Bill Quigley. "They were excellent negotiations. They were very reasonable in what they were seeking," Haddad said. "It's a good deal for the town." He added that the contract was similar to the last one, but with "financial incentives to cut back on sick leave." The three-year impact of the 17-member police union contract will be an additional $101,361. The town's 15 employees covered under the clerical union for the next three years will be $54,803.

Haddad said the town still has to negotiate new collective bargaining agreements with the town fire and library unions.

Greenbush deal draws mixed reviews

abutters."

"With selectmen saying it's all over but the shouting, and we're prepared to sign, it directly excludes those affected more by this project, from the process," Pratt said. "Maybe this is the best deal for the town but why hasn't the public had access to this prior to last week?"

Selectmen had kept a closed lid on the status of discussions over the past four months, claiming because it involved a real-estate transaction — the sale of the town owned right-of-way — the negotiations did not have to take place in an open meeting, and could instead be done in executive session. The board did release some details about the agreement in December, such as the bridge over Rocky Lane and North Main Street access to the Route-3A station, when it first announced a deal was near. But certain aspects of the final mitigation document, such as the $1 million purchase price for the right-of-way, $2.1 million for the James Brook flood control project, and MBTA backing of up to $1 million in a Public Works Economic Development grant, weren't mentioned.

Pratt said when it comes to issues such as flood control, "that's not real estate, per se." He said the town "gratuitously chose" to use an exemption to the Open Meeting Law to close the negotiations to the public. "The Town Manager and board of selectmen need to be reminded they work for the voters and taxpayers of Cohasset, and the history of this document doesn't reflect that," he said.

Pratt was also concerned that abutters were left dangling under the agreement. "Speaking as an abutter, I don't see the specifics in here as to how specifically abutters will be protected," Pratt said. "I see general language, but why don't the rest of us have vibration mats...why is flood control only confined to Cohasset Village?"

The agreement calls for the MBTA to deal directly with individual property owners to make vibration and noise mitigation deals, as it did in restoration of the Plymouth and Middleboro lines. "[The mitigation agreement] shows what the MBTA is proposing," he said, "but where does it say we're going to get that? And if I feel I'm not getting that, what are my rights to see that this is enforced?"

But another resident living in the shadow of the train isn't taking as critical a stance as Pratt. Jackie Whipple lives on North Main Street, and thinks news of an impending deal is great. "I'm absolutely thrilled they've come to this," she said. "I think the MBTA has gone way beyond what they would've expected." She thought some of the mitigation demands, such as reimbursement for the flood control project, were uncalled for by the town, saying the flooding around the post office isn't the fault of the MBTA. "The MBTA has been extremely generous," Whipple said.

The 79-year old resident said the anti-train people were either too young, or weren't around when the train stopped running through town in 1959. "Most of the people that have been the big objectors were not even in Cohasset when [restoration] was being talked about, and people who knew and loved the train could never understand their opposition to it," she said.

Whipple also criticized state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, both of whom last week reiterated their anti-train stances following the deal announcement. "I found it most discouraging and inappropriate that they vowed to keep on objecting to the train," she said. "They're also representing those of us who like the train and want the train. It seems that they represent the objectors more, and there's at least half of us that want it."

Jerusalem Road resident, and long-time pro-train activist Dr. Ed Woods also was excited to hear the news. "I read [of the deal] with great enthusiasm," he said, "I'm delighted it's progressing so well."

He said the news was made even more significant with a recent report that the South Shore is growing at a rate three times the state average, making the need for additional public transportation greater than ever. "I don't know if the train is pushing the population, of the population is pushing the train," he said.

Nonetheless, he complimented the MBTA. "The MBTA seems really willing to pitch in, " Woods said adding the agreement covers all the bases. Woods also praised the selectmen.

"I think our selectmen should be congratulated for mushing along with this," he said.

A public hearing will be held to discuss the proposed deal Jan. 30, at 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall. Comments are also welcome before the meeting.

County land plan favored

because it would not raise taxes, says Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad. Any town that adopts the Community Preservation Act could assess a property tax surcharge of up to 3 percent on each parcel of real estate in the community.

"We just think the proposal from Norfolk County is a better one at this time," Haddad said last week after selectmen voted unanimously to place it on the Town Meeting agenda. If Town Meeting voters give the okay, Cohasset would file a home-rule petition asking the legislature to allow Norfolk County to divert county deed excise taxes to its own municipal open space account. The money could then be used to buy open space, to rehabilitate existing parks, restore outdoor sports facilities, install field lights or pay for almost any other public, outdoor recreational facility.

Under the state Community Preservation Act, the primary source of revenue is a surcharge of up to 3 percent on each parcel of taxable real estate in the community. Amounts generated by the surcharge are not subject to the levy limits under Proposition 2-1/2. The CPA fund may pay for land conservation, historic preservation and to develop affordable housing. The legislation also calls for the state to kick in matching amounts obtained from annual distributions from surcharges on fees charged for recording various documents at the Registry of Deeds or Land Court.

But the Norfolk County proposal would create a community land bank without raising taxes. "The money is already being collected," Haddad explained, "but we'd get it back rather than it going into the state coffers." The one catch is that whatever the town gets back from the county won't be eligible for state matching funds.

The Norfolk County plan also gets high marks from local state legislators.

According to state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, the county plan makes better financial sense for the towns in his district that might not opt to raise their taxes.

"The Norfolk County plan was a little more workable for the town's I support," he said, adding that the preservation act would be more advantageous for some wealthy towns, which have been setting money aside for years, and not for towns with burdensome tax rates like Cohasset and Weymouth. "The feedback I've gotten back from [Weymouth Mayor] David Madden is that [the CPA] has already been dismissed [there]...The communities that have already been using part of their tax burden for open space are probably the communities that will take advantage of this."

Haddad said between the high tax rate of $14.59 and debt service accumulated from recent school and sewer construction projects, Cohasset residents probably wouldn't be keen on placing an additional voluntary tax on themselves.

"It would place two overrides on the same ballot," Haddad said referring to the possible need for a $300,000 general override this year. "This puts the budget in jeopardy."

John Dacey, the Norfolk County Advisory Board coordinator, said since the preservation act was passed last year, many officials in Norfolk County municipalities, expressed doubt that they would be able to start the fund. "Any type of appetite for an override was for school purposes or water or sewer," he said. "Open space was somewhere down the line of priorities a bit."

Open Space Committee Chairman Deborah Cook also said while the Community Preservation Act has good intentions, it probably isn't practical to implement this year. "Financially, it might not be the right time," she said.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, thinks the Norfolk County version is a good variation of the preservation act for some towns. "I'm concerned whenever it comes to an issue that concerns an increase in property taxes. I pledged to keep property taxes as low as possible," he said. "I think we can use this to give [towns with a high tax burden] another option."

The Norfolk County version was filed in 1999, but was eventually passed over in favor of the Community Preservation Act. State Rep. Maryanne Lewis, D-Dedham, has re-filed the bill, but towns are now also being asked to approve a similar version of the bill as a home-rule petition in an attempt to force the state to consider the bill.

Dacey of the Norfolk County Advisory Board explained the reason behind the preservation act. So many home-rule petitions involving land-bank accounts were flooding the State House, that the legislature was forced to deal with it, he said. Dacey hopes that by having enough Norfolk County towns and cities file home-rule petitions supporting the county plan, the legislature would also be forced to deal with the county version.

Whether to adopt the Norfolk County plan will be debated and voted upon at Cohasset's annual Town Meeting, that gets underway at 10 a.m., March 31.

Users want Mass-American water rate hike doused

Water company officials say the request is in line with the current inflation rate and is needed to cover operation, capital improvement, labor and personnel related expenses as well as the cost of additional purchases of power and chemicals to treat the water.

The rate hike is the first sought by the company in five years, but, noted Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, customers were hit with a 153 percent increase in 1996 to pay for the water company's new $37.7 million water treatment plant which was built in conformance with federal purification standards.

Hedlund also questions the timing of the request, with a large retirement community and the Hingham Shipyard development currently on the table.

"Will residential customers be paying for infrastructure improvements for these developments? Would that be fair?" he asked.

In Weymouth, developers are required to make a financial contribution towards improving the water and sewer infrastructure, he noted recently, which saves ratepayers money.

Hedlund asked for a full explanation of the proposed rate hike.

"This comes at a time when seniors and those on fixed incomes are already paying higher fuel and other bills," he said. "The water company has the right to make a profit, but I hope the department of telecommunications and energy closely scrutinizes the request."

Those who spoke at the hearing shared a number of common concerns, including the high rate of return they say shareholders are enjoying.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, jokingly thanked Mass-American for "giving me my reading material for the weekend."

He noted shareholders have received increased dividends during the past 6-1/2 years even as ratepayers experienced higher rates.

"Sooner or later instead of calling us rate payers you can call us dividend payers," Bradley said.

Roger Jackson of Hull urged the three communities to consider buying out the water company over a period of time and running the operation as a municipal utility.

"That way we would be consumers and shareholders and could keep the dividends for ourselves," he said. "It's our water company."

Hingham selectman Mathew MacIver shares his view.

"We had an opportunity to buy the water company in the past," he said. "Not doing so was a mistake because the interests of the community are not being served. We need to look at every detail of the case. We've lost our ability to control our destiny."

MacIver vowed to fight the increase "tooth and nail" and look closely at the appropriateness of water company investments and payments to officers and shareholders.

Phil Lemnios, Hull's town manager, called the water company one of the most profitable privately held utilities in the United States.

"The company has had 26 continuous years of dividends. We're the ones who need relief, not Mass-American," he said.

According to Hull resident Christopher Haraden, $83 million was paid to shareholders in 1999.

"The water company by design is a monopoly," he said. "They can set their own profit."

The number of different charges listed on individual water bills is another issue.

"The last time I heard of anyone with that many charges they were in Walpole," Lemnios quipped. "This is the first part of a very long battle because consumers are fed up about the increase requests without a marked increase in service."

The water company's 11,000 customers in the three towns pay an average of $700 a year for water. The company's rate is among the highest in the nation. If the proposed rate hike is approved, the average customer would pay an additional $26 per quarter for water, which would effectively wipe out the benefit realized by customers beginning last year with the implementation of a state ratepayer relief program.

Hedlund and former state representative Mary Jeanette Murray were instrumental in that effort.

The water company is seeking an additional $1.8 million in annual revenue, citing $8 million in capital improvements to the system, an increase in capital depreciation rates, inflation and a required change in billing structure rates.

The state department of environmental protection, in an effort to encourage water conservation, is mandating the rate structure change which would move the company towards conservation-based rates. That means lower per-gallon rates will no longer apply to customers who use more water.

Still, Hedlund and others question whether the new structure would actually benefit the average "use-conscious" consumer.

Leonard Hirsch of Hull urged Hingham water company customers to fight the proposed rate increase "with the same vehemence" with which the town has opposed Greenbush.

"We can't allow utilities to continue to put their hands in our pockets. The end has come," he said. "We've had enough of skyrocketing water bills."

Richard Lee, coordinator for Hingham's task force on affordability, asked the water company to consider providing assistance to ratepayers who can't afford to pay their bills.

Other speakers expressed concern about the strong smell of chlorine or discoloration experienced by some customers in Hingham and Hull. Others called for a rollback in rates, noting that recent legislative rate relief accorded to water company customers came from the coffers of the federal government and not from water company funds.

Samuel Manian of Hingham reminded department of telecommunications and energy representatives who attended the hearing that their role is to "protect the public's interests."

He further called for a complete audit of the water company.

Another hearing is scheduled for Monday, Jan. 29, at 7 p.m. at Hull High School. Evidentiary hearings will also be held in February and March.

The water company and department of telecommunications and energy are expected to provide responses to questions and comments made at Tuesday's hearing at a later date. The department will also analyze the financial performance of the water company in its review, according to Hedlund.

A rate hike, if approved, would take effect about June 1.

Selectmen back move to give big project oversight to town manager

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen voted to place an article on the annual Town Meeting warrant that would give the town manager project oversight of capital construction projects valued more than $100,000.

Town Manager Mark Haddad explained that neither he nor the board had any kind of oversight or control during the course of both the Central and North Cohasset sewer projects — so when it came to resident complaints, their hands were tied.

Selectmen share his concern.

"There was no centralized coordination with the projects," said Selectman Michael Sullivan. "There was no coordination with the Department of Public Works, or with [Finance Director] Michael Buckley."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said major construction projects — whether sewer, water or schools should have one point of contact in town.

In Cohasset, the water and sewer departments are separately elected boards, and don't answer to the board of selectmen.

If passed the article – which is an item of business the comes before Town Meeting – would then need a positive vote of the state Legislature to become law. The "home rule petition" asks that the managing authority of capital construction projects be given to the Town Manager, except where other arrangements already exist in Cohasset bylaws. For example, for school construction projects, the school committee is required to form a school building committee to oversee work. Under the proposed new law, this would not change.

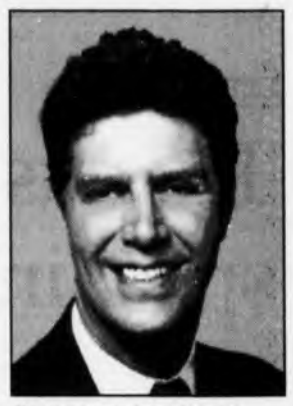
However, the article was not without opposition. Selectman Fred Koed, a former water commissioner, argued fervently against the article.

Koed argued for a "separation of powers," saying that if the water or sewer departments want to undergo a major construction project, "there's a certain responsibility with these boards" to oversee the project.

He also said that the article might seem like a good idea with Haddad as town manager but a successor could prove not up to the responsibility of overseeing a major construction project.

"We don't know what the expertise of the person will be five to 10 years down the road," Koed argued. He suggested that town concerns should be taken care of "contractually" instead.

Nonetheless, despite Koed's argument, selectmen voted 4-1 to place the article before Town Meeting.



The annual Town Meeting will be held March 31.

Chamber to host annual meeting Jan. 25

National Federation of Independent Business state director Bill Vernon will speak to the Cohasset Chamber and its guests at the Chamber's Annual Meeting Thursday, Jan. 25. Non-members are also welcome. Cohasset Attorney Kimberly La Torraco will be voted in as the new president of the chamber at the same meeting. La Torraco is a Scituate resident.

Attorney Kimberly La Torraco will be voted in as the new chamber president.

Bill Vernon will talk about the small business climate.

Vernon will speak about important changes on the horizon affecting small businesses and answer questions about the NFIB. Vernon is an attorney who served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives from 1983 to 1991. He worked for the MBTA as Director of Intergovernmental Affairs from 1991-1994 and served as Executive Director of the Massachusetts Republican Party from 1994-1996.

He has been advocating on behalf of small and independent business owners for the past two years. The NFIB, with more than 10,000 members in Massachusetts, has 600,000 members nationally with offices in all 50 states and in Washington, D.C.

The meeting will be held at the Red Lion Inn's Salon de Soleil. Cocktails are from 6 to 7 p.m.. Dinner is from 7 to 9 p.m. The cost of the dinner, including dessert is $25 per person. Please contact any chamber member, or leave a message at 383-1010 if you'd like to attend. Dinner choices are Prime Rib of Beef or Grilled Atlantic Salmon. Seating is limited, so it's best to make your reservation early. All information about the dinner and other chamber business is on the chamber's Web site at www.cohassetchamber.org

Vandals damage CMHS bathroom, teacher's room

School officials are still trying to find out who flooded a second-floor middle/high school bathroom that caused $4,799 of damage to the teacher's room.

Dr. Michael Jones, principal of the middle/high school, said sometime between 4-6 p.m. on Jan. 8, someone stuffed toilet paper into the boys room toilets, and then tied open the flush levers, causing the bathroom to flood. School maintenance workers discovered the damage later that day. The water leaked through the floor, into the teacher's room below, ruining several ceiling tiles and the carpet. School Health Education Director Dr. Michael Gill's office also experienced some flooding.

"There was a considerable amount of damage," said Jones. He said the Cohasset fire department used a squeegee to expel so much water out of the bathroom, it ran down the stairs and out the building.

Jones also said the school does have a couple of leads, and Assistant Principal Jack DiLorenzo is investigating, "There was a middle school wrestling match at the time, so there were students around." He said the school is not taking the incident lightly, saying it was vandalism, not just a prank.

Cohasset Det. Rick Grassie is also investigating.

"This was a criminal act involving damage, not just someone banging up a locker," Jones said. He added that if the culprit is caught, he or she will face punishment by the school and possible prosecution.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Thanks for speaking up

Before 2001 gets too far along, we still have some important 2000 business to attend to.

Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter to the Cohasset Mariner in 2000.

A few wrote thank you notes to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject, putting pen to paper to share your views with your fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

So here at the Mariner, we salue the following citizens:

Austin Ahearn, Tommy Alioto, Cindy Alexander for Cohasset Youth Baseball, Frances F. Andrews, Barbara Baumgarten (Barbara Mullin, Ann Brophy and Adrienne MacCarthy), Paul S. Barry Jr., Mark Bell, Lisa T. Bermis, James Blakey, Russell Bonetti, Garrett Bradley, the Brennock family, Emily Brown, Joe Buckley, R. Murray Campbell, K. C. The editorial pages of the Cohasset Mariner belong to you. It's where you can speak out or just say thank you to a citizen or group that went beyond the call of duty.

Sometimes it takes a good dose of courage to let your voice be heard, but we think it's worth it. Often one voice is all the inspiration needed to propel others to action.

Last year, the Cohasset Mariner received 188 letters from 142 different people, groups or organizations.

To those of you that have thought about writing and haven't, please reconsider. To those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing!

There are lots of weeks to go in the New Year – which will be filled with events, decisions, happenings and controversy.

Let us hear what you think in 2001.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

New bakery

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing this letter to express my disfavor at the opening of a bakery which is not only located across the street from an existing bakery but, offers a very similar menu. The reputation of Cohasset as a quaint friendly town is in direct contrast to the obvious spirit of competition that exists. The needs of the community should be considered when opening a business, in a small town. Not only is this important to ensure a new business' success, it is important to assist in building a nurturing community in which neighbors offer support rather than take it away. Developing an idea for a small business, which is not yet established may require some creativity, something that money obviously cannot buy.

MCAS accountability

TO THE TOWN SELECTMEN:

I was disappointed to read in the Jan. 11 Cohasset Mariner that you voted unanimously to adopt the Cohasset School Committee resolution to suspend MCAS as a graduation requirement. For reasons I will describe below, I do not think such a suspension is in the interest of our students or of our community's need to have well educated citizens.

First as a matter of background, Massachusetts' 1993 education reform program was based on the agreement that the state would spend more on public education and public schools would be held accountable for improving academic performance. We spent the money, but now the proposal is to renege on the accountability.

For all the money the state and Cohasset has spent on its schools and glowing words from the School Establishment, there has been no significant improvement in the Cohasset MCAS results this past year (nor since 1998, for that matter). For example, Cohasset had 14 percent of its 10th graders fail math this year, compared to 15 percent in 1999. Science and Technology failures were 11 percent, compared to 8 percent in 1999. English gave us the best results, with "only" 5 percent failing (vs 3 percent in 1999). Looking at the scores of "less than proficient" ("fail" plus "needs improvement"), the results are even worse. 28 percent of math, 47 percent of science and tech and 21 percent of English students were less than proficient. Although our results compare favorably with other school districts in the state, it is not acceptable for so many of our students not to be proficient in the basics. After all, don't we want our public school graduates to be able to compete with private school graduates?

Of course, the School Establishment immediately blames the tests. There arguments would be more compelling if they had not agreed to the tests in the first place. Granted, no test is perfect. However, only after results are in and it is time to "pay the piper" does the Establishment find problems with the tests. Frankly, I am skeptical that the tests are that hard. For example, the eighth-grade standard test in Salina, Kansas in 1895 asked students such questions as 1) name and define the fundamental rules of arithmetic, 2) find the interest on $512.60 for 8 months and 18 days at 7 percent and 3) name the republics of Europe and give the capital of each. Given that a recent survey of college seniors showed that 77 percent could not name the general in charge of the American army at Yorktown, I'll bet our 10th graders can't pass those questions of 1895.

Much is made that holding a kid back from graduation is unfair to the kid, as the fault is with the school (or teacher, or test…). My belief is that graduating a kid that isn't equipped to succeed in the modern high tech world is much more unfair, as we are relegating the kid to the bottom of the success opportunities. Besides, if the School Establishment is held to its commitments, you can bet that parents will be on their backs to get the kids educated and ready for the world. Isn't it interesting that so few parents seem to be up in arms about what their kids are learning?

If the Selectmen really feel the tests are unfair and we should graduate students without passing them, I suggest a simple experiment. Let's gather adult volunteers from town and have them take the test, and see how they do. Although I graduated from (public) high school in 1958 and know my testing skills are rusty, I'll be happy to volunteer.

Cohasset layover

Last week a (Greenbush) meeting was held in Scituate to which the public was invited, but there was no opportunity for public questions. Instead of an open discussion, the meeting closed with adjournment to yet another executive session. Why? Are our officials covering up their incompetence? Taxpayers attend to hear and be heard. There should be no secrets, no closed doors.

We do not want tunnels or overpasses, or sound barriers, or financial rewards. We want the same things that Marshfield and Norwell want. We want the benefits we are due. Place the layover in Cohasset, enlarge the parking area and give them all our mitigating money. Place this offer on the table and prepare for the battle. Wake up, Scituate, our concerns should be the amount of clout needed to win our Greenbush train battle. Are we weak or is it that we lack the organization ability to present a united front?

COHASSET CARES

A really happy RTF story

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This week I have a great story to tell, and the best part of it is that it's true. I'm not going to use any names because it would probably embarrass the person primarily involved, but he is a former Cohasset selectman, once scored four touchdowns in a game against Duxbury when he weighed in at not much more than 140 pounds — and has been active enough since to maintain about the same weight — was a former student of mine, and has done a lot for the town.

Certainly one of the best things this individual did, about 10 years ago, was to get involved in a conversation with a guy in Vermont at one of those places formerly referred to as "the dump." Our Cohasset citizen was naturally (some people would say Naturally) upset because the Vermont town where he was a recent seasonal homeowner just dumped all their trash, all their garbage, all potential recyclables, in a pit, a stinking, wasteful, disgraceful, senseless pit.

Our Cohasset representative thoughtfully and tactfully got into how the handling of such stuff was done here, and as you know, it's a real tribute to our man that he, from away, with a Massachusetts plate to boot, was able to maintain this discussion, leave alone get the Vermonter to do anything about it, which is what happened. To me this interchange is the fascinating part of the story, because in my own family we've had our tires slashed upcountry for being from Massachusetts. Our Cohasset guy is obviously a real man of the earth.

Because what happened was, to make it short, after explaining how we did it in Cohasset, our guy said he'd send up some materials from local legends Arthur Lehr and Merle Brown, and after awhile not only had the Vermont town implemented recycling, they constructed a recycling showpiece now better than ours and have influenced surrounding Vermont towns to follow suit.

As we get older we reflect upon what we might have done to make the world a better place. Have we really accomplished anything? In my estimation this Cohasset citizen, far from being your everyday guy, although he has been able to appear that way — indeed that is probably how he's been able to accomplish so much — can rest assured that spiritually he's all set. We need a whole lot more like him. Maybe one of our CHS students in the new Community Service program...or two.... See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Text of Cohasset and MBTA mitigation agreement

Public hearing is 7:30 p.m., Jan. 30 at Town Hall

Exhibit A: Environmental Mitigation Actions

Cohasset Village

1. MBTA agrees to reconstruct and expand the existing municipal parking lot in Cohasset Village to replace 1:1 all spaces displaced and not replaced elsewhere in the Village by the Project in accordance with a plan agreed to between the MBTA and Town. Town agrees to make Town owned property available to the MBTA at no cost for this purpose. However, the reconstructed parking lot shall remain the property of the Town. MBTA shall coordinate planning, scheduling and work, to the extent feasible, with the Board of Selectmen and with the Town's James Brook improvement project.

2. MBTA agrees to construct parking area(s) south of the railroad between Smith Place and Pleasant Street. The design of this area shall be coordinated with Town as in 1 above. MBTA agrees to provide a paved roadway south of the railroad between Smith Place and Pleasant Street to permit direct access between Pleasant Street and commercial properties on Smith Place. MBTA will design this roadway in consultation with the property owners at 1 and 2 Pleasant Street so as to minimize any impact to the businesses at those locations. A conceptual plan (subject to further refinement and discussion with Town) for this area is attached (see Attachment 1, hereto).

3. Town agrees that items 1 and 2 above fully compensate for the loss of existing parking areas on the former railroad right of way due to the construction of the Greenbush Line and that claims for compensation beyond items 1 and 2 shall not be made.

4. MBTA and the Town shall cooperate in developing a reasonable plan for phasing of parking area construction with the goal of maximizing the number of spaces available during the construction period of the Project.

5. MBTA agrees to install permanent walkways on either side of the railroad between Pleasant Street and a point opposite #105 Ripley Road.

Noise and Vibration Mitigation

1. MBTA agrees to provide, or cause to be installed, noise mitigation in accordance with noise mitigation guidelines for the Greenbush Line Project for impacts identified in accordance with Federal Transit Administration Guidance Manual for Transit Noise and Vibration Impact Assessment.

2. MBTA agrees to provide and maintain vibration mitigation within the railroad right of way and in accordance with vibration mitigation guidelines for the Greenbush Line Project for impacts identified in accordance with Federal Transit Administration Guidance Manual for Transit Noise and Vibration Impact Assessment.

3. MBTA agrees to provide and maintain ballast mat or other suitable vibration mitigation between Smith Place and Pleasant Street.

4. MBTA agrees to provide appropriate vibration mitigation treatments for vibration sensitive equipment at the "ABB Optical" building adjacent to the Railroad at 1 Pleasant Street.

Grade Crossings

1. MBTA agrees that train horns will not be sounded in the Town at any grade crossing, except in emergency or temporary situations.

2. MBTA shall consider using grade crossing treatments which include four quadrant gates, and shall determine whether to use such gate treatments in lieu of alternative, median-barrier treatments based on consideration of factors such as the degree of adverse impact on Historic Properties, the reliability of technology which may be applied in the operation of the crossing and which is then available in the marketplace, the compatibility of such technology with system-wide signal and communications technology applications then in use by MBTA, physical and operational constraints at the particular crossing, the history of accidents at the particular grade crossing and at crossings similarly situated in New England, legal and liability considerations, and with due regard for the safety of the public, including train passengers and personnel as well as those persons seeking to cross the rail right of way. It is understood that the MBTA's ultimate determination whether to include four quadrant gate treatment at any grade crossing in the Project's final plans and engineering will be made as follows: first (1), the MBTA shall determine whether the safety and other considerations set forth at above, are satisfactorily resolved in the use of a particular treatment at each such crossing and second (2), if MBTA makes the first determination affirmatively, it shall determine whether the selected treatment is consistent with FRA and other regulations which are then current and applicable as of the date of construction of the Project (it being acknowledged that with respect to this requirement, the MBTA shall seek a waiver of requirements of federal or state regulations if the first determination is made affirmatively and if a waiver would otherwise satisfy the requirements of then applicable FRA or other federal or state regulations applicable to such crossing).

3. MBTA agrees that median barriers, where used, will not exceed the minimum length permitted under the Federal Railroad Administration's (FRA) final Swift Act regulations.

4. Notwithstanding item 3, medians at the North Main Street grade crossing shall be as long as necessary to ensure safety at this highly skewed crossing. In the design of this crossing, the MBTA shall consider the Town's interest in preserving access to the Woodside Cemetery to the full extent as now exists.

5. Notwithstanding items 2 and 3, MBTA and Town agree that the design of all grade crossings shall be governed by the provisions of the FRA's final Swift Act regulations, and other applicable laws and regulations, and that the MBTA shall consider in the design of all grade crossings, the Town's interest in minimizing median barrier length, roadway widening, and traffic flow changes.

6. MBTA agrees to install a new traffic signal, equipped with railroad preemption, to replace the existing flashing signal at the intersection of King, Forest, and North Main Streets.

7. MBTA will consider during final design the Town's preference for only one track crossing the roadway at King Street.

8. MBTA agrees to construct a new connecting roadway with a bridge over the railroad between North Main Street and the Rocky Lane subdivision substantially in accordance with the attached plan.

9. MBTA agrees to provide a new sidewalk on the east side of Sohier Street extending approximately 100 feet either side of the railroad.

10. MBTA agrees that there will be only one track crossing the roadway at Sohier Street.

11. MBTA agrees to provide- a "hammerhead" turnaround (appropriately sized to accommodate emergency vehicles as recommended by Town's public safety officials) north of the railroad, a pedestrian only grade crossing, and a walkway between the railroad and Cushing Road at the Spring Street (West) grade crossing substantially in accordance with the attached plan.

12. MBTA agrees to remove a large rock outcrop at the Spring Street (East) grade crossing. and to realign (straighten) the roadways at the intersection of Spring and Pond Streets to improve sight lines substantially in accordance with the attached plan. The design will be mutually agreeable to the Town and MBTA.

13. MBTA agrees to consolidate the Sestito Lane and Castle Road private grade crossings at the Sestito Lane crossing and to utilize a grade crossing warning system that does not require medians or widening of the roadway.

14. In the event that the Lincoln Lane private crossing is closed, MBTA shall provide a turnaround on the South Main Street side of the railroad appropriately sized and located for emergency vehicles as recommended by the Town's public safety officials.

15. At grade crossings that are closed, MBTA agrees to remove excess pavement and provide appropriate landscaping in consultation with the Town.

16. MBTA agrees to provide new fire hydrants, and water main extensions as required, where public and private grade crossings are closed, located as recommended by Town's Fire Chief, such that there is no increase in the distance between any property in the vicinity of such grade crossings and the nearest fire hydrant.

17. MBTA agrees to provide an illuminated advance warning sign on the Pond Street approach to the Spring Street (East) grade crossing to alert eastbound motorists when the grade crossing warning system is active.

18. MBTA agrees to provide and, until first used, maintain, pipe sleeves under the railroad at locations designated by Town for future underground utility lines.

19. MBTA agrees that if required by the Department of Telecommunications and Energy (D.T.E.) MBTA will provide and maintain overhead cantilever flashers at all grade crossings in accordance with D.T.E.'s requirements.

20. MBTA agrees to provide and maintain a bell at all grade crossings to provide an audible warning to pedestrians of the approach of a train.

21. The Town agrees to closure of Rocky Lane grade crossing subject to completion of the improvements described in item 8 above.

22. The Town agrees to closure of Smith Place Crossing.

23. The Town agrees to closure of Spring Street (West) Crossing to vehicular traffic subject to completion of the improvements described in items 11 and 12 above.

24. The Town has no objections to closure of any private grade crossings as may be negotiated between the MBTA and the affected property owners subject to completion of the improvements described in items 13 and 14 above.

Stations

1. MBTA agrees to provide and maintain approximately 410 parking spaces at Cohasset Station substantially in accordance with the attached plan.

2. MBTA agrees that if either the MBTA or the Town desire additional parking at Cohasset Village Station, the Town and MBTA shall consult together prior to construction regarding the design of such parking and the MBTA shall consider the Town's preference for such design.

3. MBTA agrees to locate Cohasset Station at the "Wintergarden Site" on Route 3A near the Hingham town line.

4. MBTA agrees to provide vehicular and pedestrian access to Cohasset Station from North Main Street substantially in accordance with the attached plan and agrees that the design of the station will not provide for vehicular drop-off on North Main Street. MBTA will evaluate the need for a traffic signal at North Main Street and the station driveway and provide the same if warranted.

5. MBTA agrees to provide a traffic signal at the intersection of Route 3A and the Cohasset Station driveway, in accordance with generally applicable standards of, and subject to the approval of, the Massachusetts Highway Department (MHD).

6. MBTA agrees to provide a left turn bypass lane on Route 3A southbound at King Street in accordance with generally applicable standards of, and subject to the approval of, MHD.

7. MBTA agrees to review emergency vehicle access to the Cohasset Station with the Cohasset Fire Chief.

8. MBTA agrees to provide evergreen plantings at the Cohasset Station site adjacent to Woodside Cemetery to screen the existing portions of the cemetery from the station. Town agrees to replace any existing vegetative screening that is removed in connection with the expansion of the cemetery and to provide any additional screening that is required for such expansion.

Fencing

1. MBTA agrees to provide and maintain steel picket fencing adjacent to commercial property and parking lots between Smith Place and James Way on both sides of the right of way.

2. MBTA agrees to provide and maintain solid fencing or plantings to screen historic properties as specified in the Section 106 Programmatic Agreement (Section 106 PA).

3. MBTA agrees to provide and maintain six foot high chain link fence along the railroad property line adjacent to inhabited areas, other public areas, and as specified herein.

4. MBTA agrees to provide and maintain six foot high chain link fence along the northerly railroad property line for a distance of 1,200 feet west of King Street.

5. MBTA agrees to provide 6 foot high chain link fence along the southerly railroad property line between Sohier Street and Smith Place.

6. MBTA agrees that all chain link fence in Historic Districts will be black color as specified in the Section 106 PA.

7. Prior to the start of service on the Greenbush line, the MBTA agrees to review on-site by hi-rail vehicle the actual fencing locations for deficiencies with appropriate Town officials prior to the start of service and any deficiency so identified shall be corrected prior to such start.

Wetlands Mitigation

1. MBTA agrees to replace drainage culverts within the railroad Right of Way in the James Brook drainage basin west of Smith Place with new culverts sized in accordance with Town's James Brook Flood Control Project.

2. In recognition of the Town's concern that the Project potentially adversely impacts drainage and flooding in Cohasset Village, MBTA agrees to reimburse Town for expenses, Town incurs in making certain flood control improvements to the portion of the James Brook watershed located more or less between Cohasset Village and Cohasset Harbor, in accordance with applicable environmental laws, regulations, and policies. Such reimbursement shall include, but not be limited to, design, engineering, construction, construction management, coordination of construction of this project with other elements of construction of the Greenbush Line Project, and other such costs, in an amount up to but not to exceed the amount of $1,200,000.00, and provided that the costs for reimbursement for any such services provided by Town employees may not exceed $120,000.00. Town will be solely responsible for permitting, designing, and constructing said improvements. MBTA will reimburse Town for the actual cost of the work, including the design and other costs described above, upon presentation by the Town and approval by MBTA of invoices therefore in a form reasonably satisfactory to MBTA. Town agrees to provide MBTA with copies of payment records for verification of project cost and to permit MBTA to audit such records before or after reimbursement.

3. In recognition of the Town's concern that construction of the Project precludes the reopening of the existing backup public water supply well known as Sohier Street Well No. 1, MBTA agrees to reimburse Town for expenses Town incurs in replacing said Well in accordance with applicable environmental laws, regulations and policies. Such reimbursement shall include, but be not limited to, design, engineering, construction, construction management, coordination of construction of this project with other elements of construction of the Greenbush Line Project and other such costs, in an amount up to but not to exceed $250,000.00, and provided that the costs for reimbursement for any such services provided by Town employees may not exceed $25,000.00. Town will be solely responsible for permitting, designing, and constructing said improvements. MBTA will reimburse Town for the actual cost of the work, including the design and other costs described above, upon presentation by the Town and approval by MBTA of invoices therefore in a form reasonably satisfactory to MBTA. Town agrees to provide MBTA with copies of payment records for verification of project cost and to permit MBTA to audit such records before or after reimbursement.

4. MBTA agrees to take all practical steps to avoid or minimize potential impacts to vernal pools along the Right of Way.

5. MBTA agrees not to use the "Sand Pits" site, owned by the Town for wetland mitigation purposes.

6. MBTA agrees to design the project such that existing flooding problems adjacent to the railroad are not exacerbated.

Certain Other Understandings

1. MBTA shall prepare and submit for review and comment to Town design submissions setting forth the design of various elements of the Project (consistent with practical requirements associated with a design-build or other alternative contracting arrangements that MBTA may undertake for the Project) which represent approximately sixty percent (60 percent) of the engineering progress on such elements and also which represent approximately ninety percent (90 percent) of such development. MBTA may prepare these Design Submissions in groups representing practical segments or construction contracts, and if an alternative arrangement such as design-build is utilized, at such progress milestones for various elements as may be practicably necessitated in accordance with such arrangement. Town agrees to deliver written comments on such design submissions to MBTA within thirty (30) calendar days of receipt of such design submission from MBTA unless an alternative timetable in any particular instance is agreed upon in writing by MBTA. Failure by Town to provide written comments within said 30 day period shall be considered for purposes of this Understanding to be concurrence with such submission. The MBTA shall take such comments into account in completing the design of the Project.

2. MBTA agrees to develop in cooperation with Town a construction mitigation plan to the extent reasonably consistent with Project mitigation policies generally, recognizing the Town's goal of minimizing construction impacts in residential areas and supporting the economic viability of the downtown area.

Informal Dispute Resolution

1. MBTA and the Town agree that prior to commencement of any litigation concerning the Environmental Mitigation Actions described in this Exhibit A, the parties agree to conduct timely, informal dispute resolution in accordance with the following provisions.

2. Town's authorized representative who shall be responsible for conducting the first stage dispute resolution described herein shall be the Town Manager, currently Mark Haddad, who may be reached at 781-383-4105 (voice), 781-383-0228 (fax), and at mhaddad396@aol.com. MBTA's authorized representative shall be the Director of Design and Construction, currently Eric Botterman, who may be reached at 617-222-3116 (voice), 617-222-1557(fax), ebotterman@mbta.com.

3. For purposes of first-stage dispute resolution, either MBTA or Town shall notify the authorized representative of the other party by telephone, with confirmatory written notification by fax or email, that it disputes an action or omission to act by the other party, stating briefly the basis for the dispute in accordance with the party's obligations hereunder, stating briefly the basis for the dispute. The other party shall respond within two business days of receipt of such notification, by return phone call, with written confirmation by fax or email, describing its response to same, and shall make him or herself available to meet and confer in person with the party raising the dispute within three business days after the date the responding party issued its reply. The parties agree to then meet and confer in good faith to resolve the dispute to their mutual satisfaction.

4. In the event that the result of the meeting in the first stage is considered to be materially unsatisfactory by either party, such party shall initiate second stage dispute resolution by notifying the other party's designated representative of same in writing. Within ten business days thereafter (or at such later date as the parties may mutually agree in writing), the General Manager of the MBTA (or his designated and authorized representative who shall also be an officer of the MBTA), together with a senior official of EOTC, and the Cohasset Selectmen (not less than a majority thereof), shall meet and confer in good faith and reasonably to resolve such dispute. At such meeting, the parties may agree in writing to extend the time to resolve the matter if the parties believe that reasonable progress is being made. If at the end of the initial meeting or at the conclusion of such other meetings or conferences the Selectmen and General Manager may agree to conduct, either party determines that the dispute has not been satisfactorily resolved, such party shall notify the other orally with written confirmation by fax or email that the second stage dispute resolution process is terminated.

Exhibit B: Land Acquisition

Railroad Right of Way

1. Town agrees that the MBTA may, on a friendly basis, and subject to MBTA Board approval in accordance with the requirements of Chapters 79 and 161A of the General Laws, acquire by eminent domain the former railroad Right of Way owned by Town (consisting of approximately 26 acres and that the Town shall not contest such taking or the amount in settlement thereof and shall waive and forever release any and all claims to such land if the MBTA offers in settlement for such taking $1,000,000, which amount is predicated on the assumption that the Town has good and clear, record and marketable title to such land, free from liens or other encumbrances, except easements, restrictions and other such matters of record, if any and insofar as in force and applicable, provided that the same do not, in MBTA's sole discretion, impair the value or interfere with the use of the premises for commuter rail transportation purposes.

Other Land Acquisition

1. Town agrees to transfer by lease to MBTA, upon request and at no cost, those portions of Town Land required for the widening and realignment of Spring and Pond Streets.

2. Town agrees to transfer by lease to MBTA, upon request and at no cost, the Municipal Parking Area in Cohasset Village and adjacent Town lands, for the purpose of reconstruction and expansion of said Municipal Parking Area.

3. Town agrees that the MBTA may, on a friendly basis and subject to MBTA Board approval in accordance with the requirements of Chapters 79 and 161A of the General Laws, acquire by eminent domain, at no cost, portions of Town Ways crossing the Right of Way at grade crossings to be closed to traffic.

4. MBTA agrees to convey to Town, at the completion of the Project and at no cost, property acquired by MBTA, together with any improvements thereon, for alteration of Town Ways. MBTA will provide Town with recordable plans and with good clear record and marketable title for all such areas.

Informal Dispute Resolution

1. See "Informal Dispute Resolution" item in Exhibit A which shall also apply to the understandings reflected in this Exhibit B.

Letter to state on Greenbush pact

HONORABLE KEVIN SULLIVAN, SECRETARY
EXECUTIVE OFFICES OF TRANSPORTATION & CONSTRUCTION

DEAR SECRETARY SULLIVAN:

The purpose of this letter is to confirm that at the regularly scheduled meeting of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen held Tuesday, Jan. 9, 2001, the Board of Selectmen reviewed the various mitigation measures set forth in the Mitigation Letter, exhibits A and B. I am pleased to confirm that this package of measures appears to be acceptable at this time to the Selectmen. The Board believes that this package is complete and does not anticipate any further negotiations regarding the mitigation measures for this project prior to the MBTA including these measures as part of its proposed Section 61 findings. The Board has scheduled a hearing for the receipt of public comments on this proposed agreement for Tuesday, Jan. 30, 2001. The Selectmen plan on making a final decision whether to accept this package at that time, and I will inform you of their decision promptly thereafter.

I have been requested by the Board to communicate to you that the Selectmen and I appreciate the good faith negotiations that have taken place between the MBTA, the Secretary's Office and the Town of Cohasset. We believe that the forthright give and take evidenced by all concerned has produced a package of measures which will be a positive addition to the Project in the event that the various permitting authorities ultimately approve it.

Mark W. Haddad
Town Manager

This letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

Officials apologize for sewer pump problems

Electrical supply, temperature possible culprits

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After nearly two months of false alarms and power failures in North Cohasset — sewer officials and engineers apologized for the problem and said a solution was near.

More than 80 North Cohasset residents gathered in the Town Hall auditorium to complain, vent, and question the sewer commission, as well as representatives from Interon, as to why their new grinder sewer pumps were constantly malfunctioning.

Since Thanksgiving Day weekend in November, the new North Cohasset sewer system has been plagued with problems. Nearly all of district's 284 pumps have experienced problems ranging from false-alarms, short-circuiting, loss of power, and sewage backing up into their homes.

Interon, the manufacturers of the pumps, have been working in the district since then trying to figure out the problem. Tuesday night, Interon officials, Paul Davis from Rosano-Davis which holds the maintenance contract for the system, and sewer officials updated residents on the problem.

Vice-President of Sales and Marketing for Interon, Mike Gurnicz, apologized for the inconvenience. "I sincerely regret and apologize for the problems," he told the crowd. "I mean that from my heart as a human being." He explained that Interon had researched the pump for two and a half years in order to make it better, and for the most part it was. The company has installed 2,000 of the same pumps in other parts of the country and the North Cohasset ones are the only pumps failing. "The troublesome thing is we can't pinpoint the problem," Gurnicz said.

According to Gurnicz, Interon investigators have narrowed the problem to a couple of possibilities.

The first is that the cold temperatures could adversely affect the pump's computer systems. Since the problems did not start until Thanksgiving Day weekend, the first cold snap the area experienced since the pumps were installed, Gurnicz said a failure in the pumps' heating system could be to blame. Also, he said workers have been noticing voltage spikes within the system. Gurnicz, and Interon Sales Manager Andrew Stump both said that a number of transformers in North Cohasset aren't grounded in accordance with national standards, as were some of the pumps. Because North Cohasset is at the end of the power line, voltage spikes are not uncommon when the wires, and pumps, aren't grounded properly.

Gurnicz said after the meeting that it was "unsafe to say" if Interon was leaning towards it being an electrical problem or weather related. "We have to examine every last one of [the other possibilities]," he said. A third company has been hired to do an independent investigation, and Gurnicz said that company is leaning towards it being an electrical problem. But he quickly added that was not the company's final decision.

Gurnicz vowed that the company will remain in town until the problem is fixed, at no additional cost to residents or Cohasset. "We will not rest until the problem is solved," he said. "As soon as a solution is remedied we will be here in full-force installing it."

Stump said weather was a possibility because the problems didn't start "gradually" but happened all at once, after the cold snap around Thanksgiving.

But Anson Whealler, a Jerusalem Road resident and electrical engineer, supported the voltage spike theory. He said he has measured voltage spikes in his house from other appliances, and could possibly cause the pump malfunctions. He also told Gurnicz, "As an electrical engineer I can understand the magnitude of the problems. You're facing an engineer's nightmare, so you have some sympathy here."

Some residents weren't as understanding. Richard Sarnell of Linden Drive was highly critical of the sewer commission for choosing Interon and its pumps. Sewer Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil said the board had "no reason to believe [the pumps] wouldn't work. It wasn't a poor choice. Anyone else would've made the same decision."

Sarnell also wondered why the town chose to go with the least expensive pump. "I guess we got what we paid for," he said.

Another resident criticized the choice of the system. "It was a poor choice on behalf of the sewer commission," he said.

When Vanderweil said he didn't accept that characterization, the resident responded, "I don't care what you accept, that's my opinion."

But Gurnicz reiterated that the problems with the pumps have been isolated to North Cohasset. He said the company had installed upwards of 600 of the same pumps in other parts of the country before installing the Cohasset ones, and had installed more than 1,000 since. The only ones having wide-spread problems are the pumps in North Cohasset.

Linden Drive resident Ron Hobson said his alarm had gone off so much, he no longer calls Rosano-Davis, and instead just restarted the system himself.

Gurnicz said if a pump was to lose power, and residents wanted to shut it off and turn it on again to restart it, rather than call Rosano-Davis, they were welcome to.

He said once a cause is established, a complete repair job will be done in town, so "there's no repeat of some of these horror stories."

report, said Vanderweil, would focus on the effect of more treated water being discharged into Cohasset Harbor from an outfall pipe. Town lobstermen have expressed concern that additional freshwater discharged into the harbor would kill the lobsters they keep in storage there.

The Little Harbor proposal comes on the heels of two prior sewer projects in North and Central Cohasset. More than 1,000 Cohasset homes are now hooked up to the sewers, at a cost of $21 million split between the town and property owners. Town Manager Mark Haddad wearily said at the meeting that the town would have difficulty absorbing the cost of another major project until FY-2005. That would mean the money couldn't be borrowed until approximately 2003.

The meeting broke down into a discussion of sewer vs. septic in the long run. More than half of Cohasset remains "unsewered," facing costly future Title V upgrades.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said a long-term plan needs to be constructed to deal with issues such as the low-lying, frequently flooding homes on Atlantic Avenue, as well as homes along the reservoir, Lily Pond and Aaron River. He was afraid that by connecting Little Harbor to the Elm Street facility, it would create isolated pockets, such as along Atlantic Avenue and Forest Avenue, unable to be connected into the Central Cohasset project.

Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz came out against quickly jumping into the project, and proposed a two-year study of the issue. "To continue to leap bound after bound into these projects, it is mind-boggling," he said, adding later, the town should hold off on the project until a "clear and present threat to Little Harbor" is being made.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said the state has declared there is a threat, as part of its lawsuit against the town. North Cohasset, Central Cohasset, Lily Pond and Little Harbor were all areas named in the suit as areas in environmental danger, that needed to be remedied. Little Harbor is the only remaining area not to be sewered. By sewering Little Harbor, DeRensis said Cohasset would get "out of the remnants of the lawsuit."

"I want to see the town do this, because the town wants to," Kasperowicz responded. "Not because a bunch of bureaucrats looking for something to do wants us to. We need to be in charge and not fall on our knees every time the state says 'Boo.' They have to establish that there's a problem."

"Twenty years ago, they sued us," countered Callahan. "That established a problem."

Kasperowicz did get support for wanting some type of equity program established for those residents who will never be sewered, yet will have to pay for it in other parts of towns, as well as they're own costly septic system upgrades. Callahan, who also isn't sewered, agreed, as did other residents in attendance.

After more than two hours of presentations and arguments, the town said it would start the ball rolling, in terms of seeing what grant money is available, and the likelihood of getting the Elm Street facility expansion permits.

The Stearns and Wheeler feasibility study was the third study done on the area. A study done five years ago by Tutela Engineering said it would not be feasible, while a study paid for by grass-root Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions said it could it be done.

Funding for the $20,000 study was approved at last spring's annual Town Meeting.

COHASSET REVITALIZATION CORPORATION

Cohasset Village Survey
Preliminary Design Ideas

The Cecil Group, an urban landscape design firm, is seeking comments on possible safety, circulation and streetscape improvements in the Village and along Elm Street. We anticipate the majority of the improvement costs will be paid though state and federal grant assistance. The intent is not to detract from the existing unique character and charm of the area, but to preserve its historical essence, as well as instill elements of safety for children, bicyclists, and residents. The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) and the Town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF) request your opinion on the ideas being generated by residents, businesses and The Cecil Group. Please take a few moments to respond to the questions below. Additional comments are welcome as well. The enclosed drawings are meant to further generate ideas only, not to convey a definitive proposal. Please forward your responses to the CRC by January 22. Village Public Workshop #3

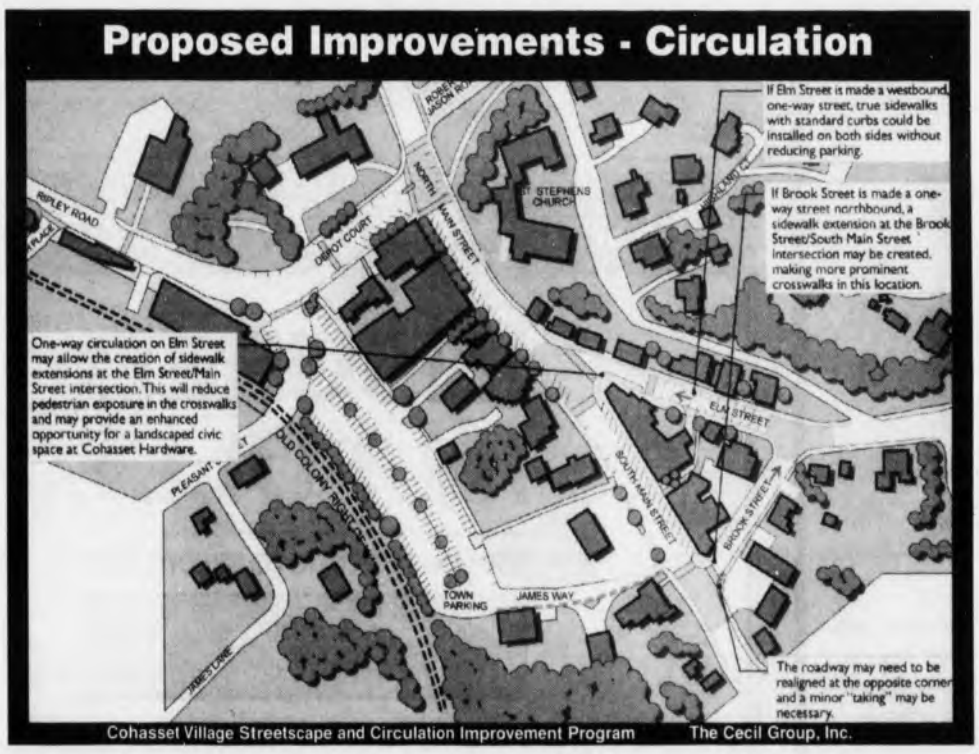
Tuesday, January 23rd @7:30 pm
Lightkeepers' Residence

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the third in a series of four community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The workshop will be held on Tuesday, January 23rd at 7:30 pm at the Lightkeepers' Residence located on Government Island. The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will give a presentation on various design alternatives for such items as new sidewalks, better parking, improved vehicle and pedestrian access, and associated streetscape design alternatives such as decorative lighting, plantings and street furniture.

The design ideas presented at the workshop will be a culmination of the public input received, land survey information recently completed, and the work of the designers and engineers at The Cecil Group. The goal of this workshop is to establish a community consensus on definitive aesthetic, circulation, and safety options to improve the village infrastructure.

Your Participation is Important!



The CRC and the Town of Cohasset encourage community participation throughout the revitalization program to bring needed improvements to the Village and Harbor areas of the community. We encourage you to convey your questions, ideas, or comments to the CRC and/or the Village Revitalization Task Force of the Town of Cohasset. Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm Street (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10:00 am - 4:00 pm; Tuesday 12:00 - 8:00 pm. We encourage you to review the plans on display, and contribute to the community vision of Cohasset Village.

Village Survey

Enclosed are the plans showing some of the infrastructure improvement ideas being considered for Cohasset Village. Please take a few moments to review the plans and complete the survey on the preceding page. Your input is essential as we strive to build a community consensus on the future of Cohasset Village.

Town election slate starts to take shape

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

At least once race may develop during this spring's town election season.

With incumbent school committee members Pat Martin and Mark DeGiacomo already announcing they will seek a second-term on the board, Doane Street resident Adrienne MacCarthy has taken papers out to make it a potential three-way race. MacCarthy is active on the Osgood School PSO, and has been a vocal supporter of the need to reinstate the technology instructor position at the Osgood.

Martin and DeGiacomo are the first incumbents to seek reelection to the school committee since at least 1997.

Also taking out paper this past week was current Board of Assesors member Elsa Miller; Richard Brown of Church Street, for the vacant Planning Board seat; and Stanton Road resident Sean Cunning, for sewer commissioner.

Current planning board member Terry Atherton and sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury have already announced they will not be seeking another term.

Thomas Wigmore said we will not seek reelection to the recreation commission.

"Ten years is enough," said Wigmore, who works as a civilian dispatcher for the police/fire station. "I'd like to see young residents with kids who play sports in this town take over."

Wigmore also said he is too busy with the Sons of the American Legion to devote the necessary time to the position.

Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo, Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan and Selectman Merle Brown have also announced they will seek another term.

Two water commissioners spots will be up for election, though one will be for a one-year term to replace former commissioner Chip Muncey. Muncey resigned Jan.1, and was temporarily replaced by Glenn Pratt, until someone can be elected to fill the year left of his term. Pratt is expected to run. Robert Kasameyer's seat is also up for election. Kasameyer couldn't be reached for comment.

Nomination papers for the annual town election are now available at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions are up for grabs:

Selectmen - two for three years

School Committee - two for three years

Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three for three years

Assessor - one for three years

Board of Health - one for three years

Cohasset Housing Authority - one for five years

Planning Board - one for five years

Recreation Commission - one for five years

Sewer Commission - one for three years

Water Commission - one for three years, one for one year to fill an unexpired term

Nomination papers must be submitted to the Board of Registrars by Feb. 15. Town elections will be held on Saturday, April 7.

State: Town teachers lacking professional development funds

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset School Department has failed to meet state spending requirements for professional development funds for its teachers for at least two years in a row, says the state Department of Education.

In a letter sent from state Education Commissioner David Driscoll, the town is told that the submitted FY-2001 school department budget is $7,375 short when it comes to properly funding professional development line items.

According to state law under the 1993 Education Reform Act, towns are required to spend $125 per pupil for professional development. Professional development funds can be used to send teachers to training and development courses during the school year, said Department of Education Administer of School Finance Roger Hatch. "The state has published guidelines as to what exactly counts as professional development, and we've shared that information with the towns," he said.

In exchange for additional school funding money, known as Chapter 70 money, towns are required to spend a certain amount on professional development. In 1996, schools were required to spend $25 per student. This year, Cohasset was required to spend $157,375 on professional development. Only $150,000 was allocated in the FY-2001 budget.

"$7,000 is something that could be corrected this year," said Hatch. "They do appear to be making an effort. Clearly they plan to spend more [on professional development] than they did last year." In FY-2000, Cohasset was required to spend $154,875, but spent only $102,295.

"The state has published guidelines as to what exactly counts as professional development, and we've shared that information with the towns."

— Department of Education Administer of School Finance Roger Hatch

Hatch said if the town doesn't meet the state requirements, it "could certainly come under scrutiny of audit teams." There currently isn't a financial penalty in place, but Hatch added, "that's not to say there won't be in the future."

Neither Cohasset School Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey, nor Cohasset teacher's union president Ed Leonard were familiar with the report, and weren't able to comment.

Third quarter tax bills

The Town of Cohasset has issued the Fiscal Year 2001 third quarter tax bills due Feb. 1. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the Board of Assessors at 781-383-4114 to confirm the correct mailing address or the Treasurer and or Collector at 781-383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

The Fiscal 2001 total tax is based on the new Fiscal 2001assessment. The new assessments are based on sales market activity during calendar 1999 and early 2000 to reflect the value of real estate as of Jan. 1, 2000. Taxpayers who feel that their property is over assessed and want to contest their assessment must file for an abatement with the Board of Assessors by Feb. 1, 2001.

Property tax exemptions are available to qualifying elderly widows, blind persons and veterans with a 10 percent service connected disability or greater. Please call the Assessors at 383-4114 for more information. Applications for property exemptions must be received by the Board of Assessors no later than March 28, 2001.

The tax bill also contains the new sewer betterment to be paid during this fiscal year is shown of the tax bill under the "special assessment" section and identified as "SEWR". The total amount due is split between the third and fourth quarter payments. Anyone who did not return the appointment request has had the sewer betterment apportioned over twenty years by the Board of Assessors. Anyone who would like to appeal their betterment must file an abatement application with the Sewer Commission within six months of the issuance of the betterment.

Enclosed with the tax bills is an insert that allows taxpayers to make a voluntary contribution to the Scholarship, Education or Elderly and or Disabled funds established last year at the annual town meeting. Scholarship Fund will provide secondary school tuition assistance to deserving town residents. These funds will be in addition to scholarships currently available to town residents.

WEDDINGS

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh A. Carney

Carney — Maurer

Maryellen Maurer, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Maurer of Cohasset, married Hugh A. Carney, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh A. Carney of Canton Sep. 30, 2000 at the Immaculate Conception Church in North Easton. The Rev. Edward Riley celebrated the marriage. The Revs. John O'Doherty and Brian Gallagher concelebrated.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. The bride's sister, Gail Maurer Oliveria was the matron of honor. Bridesmaids included the bride's sister Barbara O' Driscoll; the groom's sisters, Maureen Carney, Cecelia Carney, Colleen Carney; and Anne Carney, friend of the bride. Katie O'Driscoll served as the junior bridesmaid. Sarah Maurer and Faith O'Driscoll were flower girls.

The groom's brother, Brian Carney served as the best man. Ushers included John Ivanoski, John Goggin, Jim Walsh, Chris Papageorge, and Joe Higgins friends of the groom. The ringbearers were Drew and Alex Oliveira.

A reception was held in the tent at Anthony's Pier 4 in Boston, followed by a wedding to trip to Rome, Positano, and Florence Italy.

Garden club to meet

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday, Jan. 23, at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

Carolyn Mostecki will demonstrate the various ways in which accessories, birdhouses to benches, can be used to enhance personal landscapes. From casual country to more formal styles, accessories help set the mood.

Coffee is served at 9 a.m. An opportunity to meet old friends while adding anticipation for using accessories to your garden, just a few months away.

Native American artist returns

Hawk Henries, one of the Native American artists featured at the South Shore Art Center's fall exhibit will return to the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset on Wednesday, Jan. 24 at 7 p.m. A member of the Nipmuck Nation. Hawk hand crafts Eastern Woodland song flutes. Taking a global view of his art form and music, Hawk's message is a metaphor for human diversity.

Hawk's presentation will appeal to all ages. Admission will be $10 for adult, $3 for child, with a $20 family maximum.

David Zucker

Life with soul

David Zucker, teacher, actor and mime, will conduct a workshop about bringing soul into everyday life and work from 9 a.m.-1 p.m. Jan. 20, at the First Parish House, 23 North Main St. Zucker's workshops use the power of live theater to bring both the actor and audience into a direct experience of "being," what ancient Greeks called a catharsis. The cost is $30 for parish members and $40 for non-members. Call, 383-1100.

LIBRARY CORNER

Story hour

Registration for the six week 2001 winter story hour at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is still open.

Come into the library and sign up for the story hours being held Thursday at 1 p.m. and Fridays at 10 a.m. until Feb. 16.

Children must be at least 3 1/2 to 5 years old to participate. The 45-minute program includes picture stories, songs and crafts. Call Suzanne Terry, Children's Librarian at 383-1348 to register.

Repair kit

Book connoisseurs will appreciate this latest addition to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. It is called "The Book Lover's Repair Kit" written by Estelle Ellis with Wilton Wiggins & Douglas Lee.

The format is designed as a repair and first aid kit all in one for home libraries. The authors give you step-by-step instructions for mending pages, reinforcing loose and frayed covers and the cleaning and care of books. The book is available for a two-week check-out period.

Library trustees file for grant

The trustees and director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library submitted a Massachusetts Public Library Construction Grant application to the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners in Boston. The original and six copies of the lengthy document were hand delivered by Library And Building Committee Chairwoman, Patience Towle, and fellow trustee, Roger Whitley.

The trustees are asking the state for more than $1,529,000 funding for conversion of the old Osgood School to a new Cohasset Public Library. The MBLC will award $17,000,000 to selected towns and wait list most of the remaining applicants, on June 7. The trustees hope for funding at this time so that construction might start as early as September, 2001.

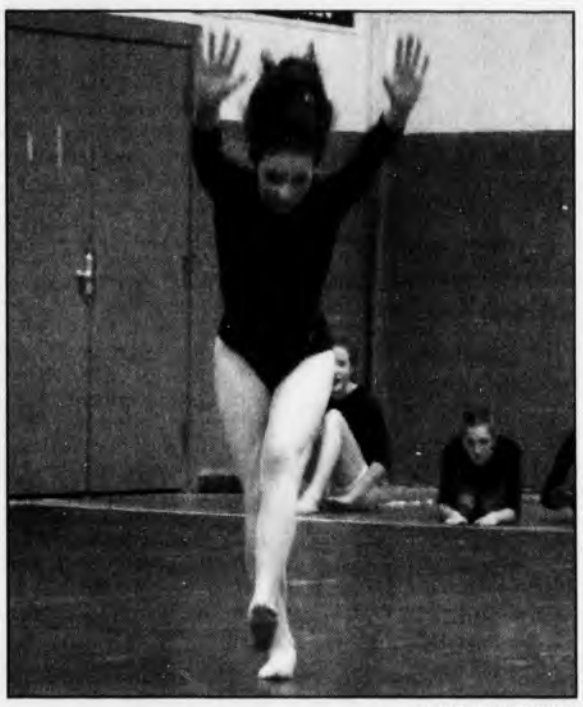
Big efforts from Sheerin and Bixby propel girls past Notre Dame

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

In her first event of the evening, co-captain Kristin Sheerin flipped through the air, landed off-balance, and wound up on her fanny during her bars dismount. Surely, Cohasset-Norwell's star gymnast would be flustered for the remainder of the non-league meet against Notre Dame in the annual feel-good competition.

Sheerin was indeed flustered – for a grand total of 10 seconds – before reapplying the war paint and going back to work. She proceeded to put the bars and her 8.2 score in the archives and coolly switch gears to overdrive in leading the Skippers to a convincing 123.7-115.9 win over the Cougars in a rare meet at the South Shore Community Center.



Sheerin, who last Monday broke her own school record in the all-around with a 35.15 in the Skippers' loss to Hanover, led a Cohasset-Norwell sweep in the bars and took the all-around title with a 34.6. Sheerin also recorded her best score of the season with a rousing floor routine, good for a rock-solid 9.1 mark, just off her career best of 9.15.

Teammate Meredith Bixby, who picked up a second and three third-place finishes, was second in the all-around with a 31.0 and Notre Dame's Siobhan Hart was right on her heels at 30.9. The Cougars' Rachel Galanek was fourth with a 28.0.

The victory, coupled with last Thursday's 124.75-121 decision over Hingham High, was the Skippers' second in a row and improved their record to 4-1 on the season, heading into Thursday's showdown with Randolph.

Sheerin's explanation for being able to put the less-than-stellar dismount behind her sounded like words straight from a Rick Pitino motivational book. "It kind of

Boys keep on rolling

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Sick, injured, bruised and just plain banged up, the Cohasset boys basketball team toughed out their misfortunes this past week with two wins over non-divisional opponents in South Shore Voc. Tech and South Shore Christian Academy.

Cohasset, playing at Voc Tech, pounced on their hosts to open up a 21-2 lead just four and a half minutes in. Even after Cohasset had emptied its bench by the second half, the Skippers refused to let up, and ended up victorious 78-45.

Senior captains TJ Bilodeau, Doug O'Brien and Erik Shea, who played only the first half, combined for 35 of the Skippers 43 opening half points, on 13-for-19 shooting from the floor.

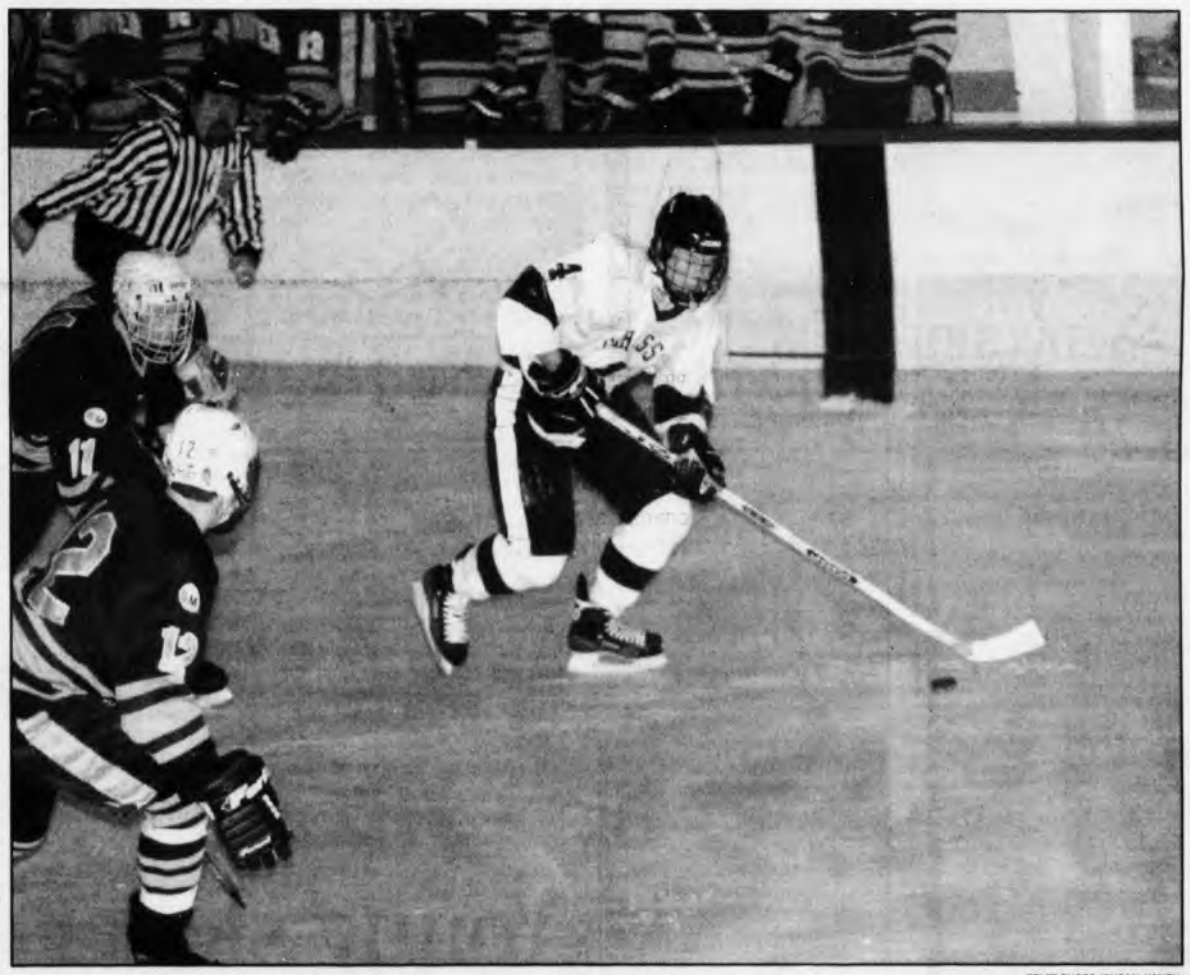
Junior point guard Matt Bilodeau, who played only sparingly in the second half, ran the offense extremely well with four points and a team high eight assists, while recording a season high eight steals.

Sophomore Ian Kidder, only playing the second half because he helped lead the JV to victory earlier that day, tallied 11 points with two steals and two rebounds, while freshman center Sean Connolly chipped in with 10 points to go with six rebounds.

Matt Kenelly led the way for the Vikings with 13 points, while senior captain Scott Baker had 12 for Voc Tech.

Two days later, the Skippers tipped off against the Warriors of South Shore Christian Academy, who, despite their 19 first half turnovers, were only down 21-17 at the half.

After the intermission, however, Cohasset pulled away with the help of some timely shooting, including four crushers from behind the arc, and ended up winning 61-42.



"We are not hitting as many threes as I thought we would," reported Cohasset coach Ron Ford, "but the threes we are hitting are huge."

TJ Bilodeau led the way with 16 points and six steals, with Shea adding 14. Sophomore power forward Ben Lynner had nine points and seven boards.

Though this stretch of games has been looked at as the soft part of the schedule, Coach Ford admired the courage of his hurt and ailing players.

"It is lucky that this came when it

Hockey team stays competitive despite a pair of hard losses

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

At 3-6-1, the young hockey squad for Cohasset has managed to stay tough in a very strong league.

Competing against teams from far larger schools, such as Hanover, Abington and Rockland, Cohasset has needed be physical in order to earn any respect around the league.

Thirty-second year coach Dennis Walsh is proud of the way his squad has handled itself against such strong teams.

"They are not afraid of anybody," said Walsh, a former hockey and football player, and no stranger to physical play. "They will go out and hit anybody. We are not small, but we are not a big team either."

Helping to lead the way in this department has been junior wing Chris Caron, who, after a year of playing goalie, is happy to be back attacking the goal rather than defending it.

"He is one of our better checkers," appraised Walsh. "He is tough, and he works hard."

In their most recent game, Cohasset was beaten out by Trinity Catholic, 6-5, in a seesaw affair.

Cohasset jumped out on top of TC quickly, collecting three goals within the first five minutes, the first from sophomore center Matt Davis, and the next two from Caron.

However, Trinity Catholic managed to tie the game and go ahead 6-4 in the second period, with sophomore wing Tom Anderson netting the fourth Cohasset tally.

Though junior defenseman Tim Straughn put one in with just minutes remaining, Cohasset could not finish the comeback.

"They worked hard, but mistakes killed us today," admitted Walsh.

Prior to the Trinity Catholic game, Cohasset lost to a very physical Abington team last Saturday, 3-1. The lone Skipper goal came from junior wing David Bouchard, with center Pete Whoriskey recording the assist.

Cohasset's last win came over tough divisional opponent Norwell, a 5-3 triumph last Wednesday to hand the Clippers just their second loss on

Wrestling team takes it on the chin

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Continuing to face the mettle of this area's wrestling talent despite being in the midst of a rebuilding year, the Cohasset High wrestlers came out on the bottom in a quad match on Friday at home with New Bedford, Duxbury and Sharon.

In spite of some strong individual performances from Cohasset grapplers, the most impressive of these being three first period pins from Dan Littauer at 145-pounds, the Skippers fell on points in all three matches— with New Bedford taking them 55-9, Duxbury 49-20 and Sharon 51-15—dropping their record on the season to 4-8.

Of course, New Bedford (with only two losses this season) and unbeaten Duxbury are two of the area's stronger teams. Sharon is also a better than .500 team, which Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney said just "matched up very well with us."

"I don't think Sharon was that much better than us," said Sweeney. "They just had a slight edge in a few key match-ups, and that made it appear more one-sided than it actually was."

Cohasset's Pat Carbone (152 pounds) and captain Dan Duffy (135) came up with wins in two of their three matches.

Freshman Phil Strazzula (112), sophomore Terry Baroudi (130) and junior Vinnie Gratta (103) also came up with a win apiece against some tough competition

One other wrestler Sweeney wished to commend for his performance was his 215-pound grappler, John Hussey.

"John wrestled very well against some top caliber competition," asserted the 10th year head coach. "He went the distance with two of

Lady Skippers get in 'W' column

Young team gets a confidence boost with win over Mashpee, 49-45

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After a tough opening month for the girl's varsity basketball team, the Lady Skippers dodged past Mashpee, 49-45.

Down 29-14 at halftime, and seemingly facing another defeat, Cohasset clawed its way back into the game with a trapping press.

"The guards did a wonderful job putting pressure on the ball," effused second year coach Ellen Carr, citing the great job her charges did forcing turnovers in the second half.

Just minutes into the second half, Cohasset had cut the lead down to eight thanks to two huge buckets from junior forward Liza Parker.

"I think that fired everybody up," said Carr.

Down the stretch, Cohasset tied the game, and went ahead on clutch free throws by sophomore shooting guard Heather Perkins (3 points), and point guard LaRaine Langford (eight points).

Sophomore small forward Lindsay Grossman had 11

them, and gave them all they could handle."

Cohasset was also hurt in the quad-meet by sickness, as absences cost them forfeits across the board in three weight classes, giving the competition a +18 right from the get-go.

Sweeney figures that the toughest part of his team's schedule is now behind them, and has hopes that the squad can claw back towards .500 in their remaining 10 match-ups.

"We've got most of our league meets coming up in the next few weeks, plus a huge quad meet next weekend (Jan. 27 @Durfee, with Wayland and Whitman Hanson also on the schedule)," offered Sweeney. "I definitely think we've got some winnable matches in there."

points, while shutting down Mashpee's top scorer in the second half. Freshman center Danielle Pinkus had eight to round out the even offensive attack.

"We were very balanced," affirmed Carr, clearly pleased to see her team spread the ball, rather than rely on one or two big scorers to carry the offense."It gave them a little bit of breathing room."

With such a young club, Carr was also pleased with the composure shown. She noted how easy it would have been to simply give the game up at halftime.

"The one good thing about that team is that there is no discouragement," the second year coach asserted.

Though the win over Mashpee improved Cohasset's record to a mere 1-9 for the season, having the victory under its belt means a lot to the team.

"It is a relief," said Carr. "I think it takes the pressure off."

Most recently, the Lady Skippers faced their ninth loss of the year, coming up short against the Pirates of Hull, 41-37.

Cohasset did hold leads as large as five points at a few junctures during the game, but even with 15 points from Peraino, 11 from Grossman, and what Carr called a "slew of rebounds" from sophomore power forward Maura O'Brien, the Lady Skippers could not finish it out.

Prior to the Mashpee match-up, the Lady Skippers held a very tough Carver team close for a good portion of the game, but the Lady Crusaders ended up with the win, 61-43.

Grossman tossed in 20 points to lead her team.

This game illustrated what Carr thinks is the team's main weakness: transition defense. Several times down the floor, Carver was able to take defensive rebounds and make quick outlet pass that resulted in fast break lay-ups.

"That is where we really get stung," said Carr.

Their record may not be where the team might want it to be, but the first win is always necessary to making strides for the rest of the season.

Summed up the coach, "Hopefully, we will continue to move forward."

The freshman squad has continued to improve and, after recent wins over Mashpee and Norwell, has upped its record to 3-5 on the year.

INDOOR SOCCER PROGRAM

There are openings in most of the age groups from first through sixth grades. This is a fun way to exercise and increase soccer skills at the same time. The times are listed below for each age group and are Sundays at the Osgood Gym. There is a 30-minute skills session with a professional coach followed by a 45-minute game. There is a limit of 15 players per age group. The program will run for 10 Sundays, January through March, omitting the February vacation weeks.

Cost is $75 and forms can be picked up at the Recreation Department or call the following for information:

First/second-grade boys: 12 to 1:15 p.m., Jay Monaco, 383-9655

First/second-grade girls: 1:15 to 2:30 p.m., Andrew Quigley, 383-9795

Third/fourth-grade boys: 2:30 to 3:45 p.m., Tom Judge, 383-2179

Third/fourth-grade girls: 3:45 to 5 p.m., Scott Collins, 383-2498

Fifth/sixth-grade boys: 5 to 6:30 p.m., Don Dickinson, 383-2717

Boys Soccer team to be honored

The boys soccer team, which made it to the semifinals of the Eastern Mass. state tourney this fall, will be honored before the Jan. 23 game with Hanover, withte hhangign of a banner commemorating the achievement. The Tuesday night game is scheduled to start at 6:30.

The team's first year coach, Dave Nigro was recently selected as Coach of the year by the Eastern Mass Soccer Coaches Association. Soccer captains Erik Shea and Doug O'Brien were also honored by the Association, being named to their All-Star Team. Shea and O'Brien are also captains and standouts with the basketball team.

motivates me because I know I have to make it up," she said. "One fall's not the end of the world, and if you're a true competitor you can't let it affect your whole meet."

Cohasset-Norwell's best event of the evening proved to be the vault with a 31.9. Sheerin won the event with an 8.4 and Bixby finished in a tie for second with Hart and her Notre Dame teammate Meg Shea with an 8.1. Amy Maree figured into the scoring with a 7.9, as did Katie Portanova and her 7.5.

The vault was also the Cougars' most productive of the evening as they finished with a 31.2. Behind Hart and Shea, Rachel Galanek hit an 8.0 and Moira Brady landed a 7.0 for the team's only score above 30.

Along with their sweep in the bars, the Skippers were first and third on the beam with Sheerin nailing a tough routine in 8.9 and Bixby scoring a 7.8. Shea was second for the Cougars with her 7.5. Maree hit a 7.0 and Hart landed a 7.5 for the Cougars.

Carter is still a big question mark after straining a ligament in her knee during warm-ups against Hanover. Carter picked up second in the vault, her lone event of the meet, before calling it a night. The team leader and, along with Sheerin and Bixby, an automatic in the Skippers' scoring, Carter is absolutely indispensable if Cohasset-Norwell has any hope of qualifying for the South Sectional meet.

Head coach Kara Connerty said the team hasn't lost sight of qualifying for the South Sectional meet. The meet, which features the top-10 teams in the South and the respective league champions, is very much within the Skippers' grasp, assuming Carter is at full strength.

"We're still hoping to make the South Sectionals," said Connerty, whose first winter as head coach has drawn rave reviews from her gymnasts and former coach Ruthann Ardizzoni, alike.

Sheerin said the Skippers would have to come up big in their remaining meets to reach the South Sectionals. "We just have to hit the rest of our meets," she said.

Football awards

Cohasset Football held it's annual Breakup Breakfast at the Atlantica, Saturday, Dec. 9,2000. Guest speaker was former N FL quarterback Tom O'Connell

Head coach Tony Rolfe awarded ten freshman, sophomores and juniors first-year letters and jackets. They were as follows: Tom Anderson, Chris Bilodeau, Tom Bilodeau, Cosimo Cambi, Stephen Davis, Braun Goodson, Brendan Goff, John Hussey, Ben Lynner and Chris McKenna. Second, third and fourth year letter recipients were Jason Brown, Pat Carbone, Chris Golden, Justin Langham, Jari Martin, Liam Martin, Will Prendergast, Paul Previte, Jeff Scribner, Nick Bolster, Ronan Buick, Brian Krupczak and Craig Davis.

TEAM AWARDS:

SCITUATE/COHASSET YOUTH FOOTBALL AWARD: Craig Davis

SOUTH SHORE LEAGUE ALL-STARS: Ronan Buick, Craig Davis, and Brian Krupczak

BOSTON GLOBE EASTERN MASS. DIV.4 ALL-STAR: Craig Davis

On a final note, Torin Sweeney's Junior Varsity Team finished 4-4 with great play by Mike Casey, Adrian Batson, Terry Baroudi, Mike Snowdale, John Durkin, Tony Truglia, Dan Tarpey, Mike Hajar, Mike Dooley and Dwayne Morris.

The middle school had 33 7th & 8th grade players on the team and finished strong under Brian Patterson. They'll add a dozen or so players to the varsity squad next season.

Good luck to all of the Seniors in their future endeavors.

did, because we were pretty banged up," the 10th year head coach noted.

Among the names on the "hurting" list are Shea, who played in both games despite a sprained ankle and a banged up elbow, and junior Liam Martin, who has not fully recovered from the collapsed lung and broken ribs he suffered back on Dec. 22 against Norton.

"Liam will be a big boost when he comes back," said Ford, as Martin started practicing again on Monday. "I think he will come back and have something to say. He plays with reckless abandon, and that is why he is so successful."

Martin was the team's third leading scorer for Cohasset before his injury sidelined him, and hopefully will play in Cohasset's next game, a league match-up against the 5-4 Green Wave of Abington.

In addition to these injuries, sophomores Ian Kidder and Jared Krupczak, and freshman Chris Bilodeau and Connolly have come down with serious colds, as the flu season has gotten to the team.

"Every team has been hit by it," noted Ford.

If Cohasset can beat Abington this Friday, no easy task against the athletic and balanced offense of the Green Wave, they will maintain second place in the South Shore League.

The league is wide open this year, with Carver (9-0) on top with no SSL losses as of yet. , but barely got by Norton with an overtime win. Though it seems Carver is the team to beat in order to win the league title, Ford refuses to look anywhere past the task at hand: Abington.

"You won't even hear me mention Carver until we play them in February," he declared.

Still, it is hard to be less than elated when your team is 8-2, 4-1 in the South Shore League.

"I probably would have been happy with 4-6," said Ford, smiling.

"We had two close games, and we won them both," he continued, referring to the 73-71 overtime win over Norwell, and 64-63 nailbiter over Norton.

Game Notes

South Shore Voc Tech:

-The Vikings shot 0-for-3 on three pointers in the first half, then 5-for-8 in the second half.

-Cohasset had only 12 turnovers, while forcing the Vikings into committing 27.

-Voc Tech had only two 4-0 runs in the game.

South Shore Christian Academy:

-The Warriors were the only opponent Cohasset has faced this year that averaged more than one turnover per minute, making 35 in a 32 minute game.

-James Cattanio, who had scored 37 points the night before against Marion, was held to 12 by the Skippers.

-Combining the second halves of both contests, Lynner scored 14 points, 10 coming off foul shots.

the season (against seven wins). Caron and Anderson each tallied a goal and assist, while Davis recorded two goals. Devine had three helpers, and sophomore John Durkin put in a goal.

In that win, first year goalie Dan Kinchla had an excellent game in net.

"He has been doing real well," started Walsh, who feels that the goalie position in hockey is the hardest single position in all sports. "He has made some spectacular saves."

Walsh was extremely proud of the way his defense played in that contest, noting the outstanding effort from freshman Mike Devine.

Senior captain defenseman Dan Morse also earned high praises from the coach for his leadership of such a callow squad.

"He is a very quiet guy," offered Walsh, "but he leads the way. He works hard, listens to the people, and does a good job."

The offense has been led by the sophomores Greg O'Connell (18 points) and Davis (15 points), who were both big time contributors last year as well.

"It is nice that they will hopefully be coming back, and getting better," said Walsh.

Right behind the second year scorers are Bouchard and Caron, recording over 13 points apiece.

The power in the league has been very evenly dispersed this year, with perennial powerhouse Hanover sneaking by the Skippers 4-2 not so long ago, and just barely getting by Scituate this past weekend.

POLICE BRIEFS

Sign up for Citizens Police Academy

The Citizens Police Academy sponsored by Cohasset police starts Feb. 5.

Classes will be conducted from 6-9 p.m. once a week for nine weeks. Curriculum includes criminal and constitutional law, court procedures, probable cause and elements of crimes, motor vehicle law and accident investigation, firearms and use of force, patrol procedures, traffic enforcement and community policing. Ride-alongs with police officers may also be included.

Applications are available at the police station on Elm Street.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said there is no charge for participants. The estimated $3,000 cost of conducting the academy that may include some overtime to cover shifts is being paid for through a state grant earmarked for community policing services.

The class size at the academy is limited to 12 people, age 16 and older. Noonan said police hope to get a cross-section of teenagers, parents and senior citizens.

"We hope participants will see what we really do, how people are treated and how we do our job," he said.

Police arrested 14 last month

"December was relatively a quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department," Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

"There were 14 arrests, two for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, one for Larceny, two for Protective Custody, three for Warrants, one for Assault and Battery, two for Assault by Dangerous Weapon, and finally three for Minor Transporting Alcohol," he said.

In the month of December the police department investigated 18 motor vehicle accidents, one of which resulted in injury. There were 125 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $3,345 in fines. Additionally, there were 134 parking tickets issued for $4,175. in fines.

Also in the month of December the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 645 calls for police services, of those 103 were Emergency 911 calls, Noonan said.

During December there were also nine criminal complaints issued and or applied for, he said.

OBITUARIES

Henry Johns Bowdoin

Henry "Harry" Johns Bowdoin, 64, Dyke Road, formerly of Cohasset, MA., died Jan. 14, 2001, at his home with his family by his side.

He was born in Baltimore, Md., the son of George and Harriet (Gibbs). He graduated from the Gilman School and Williams College.

After fulfilling his duties as a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps where he served as an infantry officer from 1959 to 1962, he returned to Baltimore and began a career in banking with Maryland National Bank. He had served from 1970 to 1975 as assistant vice president for marketing and sales at the Society for Savings in Hartford, CT.

In 1975 to 1981 Harry served as vice president and director of marketing at the Union Warren Savings Bank in Boston. Mr. Bowdoin worked at Fidelity Investments from 1981 until his retirement in December 1997. During his tenure he served in many capacities for a number of different Fidelity divisions. For the last four years he was a vice president in the Fidelity Investments Advisor Group where he was responsible for developing and managing the group's network of thousands of Fidelity and non-Fidelity mutual funds.

He lived for 22 years in Cohasset, where he enjoyed sailing and playing competitive squash and tennis. In retirement he played an active role in the Sugar Hill community serving the town as a trustee of the trust funds and as an alternate on the zoning board of adjustment. He was a board member of the North Country Players. As a member of the Profile Club, he co-chaired the tennis committee, and at the Four Seasons Tennis and Sports Center he volunteered his time teaching squash to local area high school students. He also gave his time to SCORE as a volunteer counselor to people wanting to start a small business.

Mr. Stephen Burton, Senior Vice President at Fidelity Investments, recalls that Harry's contributions to Fidelity extended far beyond his official responsibilities. It was not unusual to pass his office and see someone asking for his advice, either professionally or personally. His honesty, integrity, and sense of humor drew people to him, and he was a trusted friend to many of his associates. His caring about his friends at Fidelity did not end at retirement. Even during the worst of his illness, he still wanted to hear the "Fidelity News" and was truly interested in how former colleagues were doing. Those of us who were fortunate to work with Harry, two phrases are most often associated with him..."He was a gentleman, he was a true friend."

He leaves his wife, Anne Carter Bowdoin, Sugar Hill, N. H.; two daughters, Alice Carter Bowdoin, Boston, Julia Bowdoin Godtfredsen, Cambridge; three sisters Harriet Constance Bowdoin, Baltimore, Md., Alice Bowdoin Baldwin, Chestertown, Md., and Helen Macqueen Bowdoin, Concord.

A memorial service will be held Friday, Jan. 19 at 2 p.m. at the Sugar Hill Meeting House, Sugar Hill, N. H.

Memorial contributions may be made to DHMC, Norris Cotton Cancer Center, One Medical Center Drive, Lebanon, N.H. 03756-0001 or the North Country Chamber Players, c/o Stephen Dignazio, P. O. Box 904, Littleton, N.H. 03561.

For more information or to sign the guest book, please go to www.rossfuneral.com. Ross Funeral Home, Littleton Chapel, has the privilege of these arrangements.

Isabel R. Gleason

Isabel R. (McEwen) Gleason, 90, of Cohasset, a homemaker, died Jan. 5, 2001, at Quincy Rehabilitation and Nursing Center.

Mrs. Gleason enjoyed knitting, gardening, cooking and boating.

Born in Pictou, Nova Scotia, she lived many years in Scituate before moving to Cohasset.

Wife of the late Herbert E. Gleason Jr., she leaves three sons, William E. Gleason of California, and Robert E. Gleason and Dana R. Gleason of Hanover; three daughters, Geraldine Cerilli and Isabel R. Salvador of Scituate, and Phyllis C. Walker of New Hampshire; two stepchildren, Elinor Loring of Florida and Eldridge A. Gleason of Nebraska; 28 grandchildren; and 51 great-grandchildren. She was mother of the late Dennis W. Gleason.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Frances Xavier Cabrini Church, Scituate. Interment was in Groveland Cemetery, Scituate.

Even though they haven't produced new music in more than 30 years, the Beatles have risen to the top of the pop charts with their new album featuring old number one songs.

Meet the Beatles — again

By Ken Capobianco
CNC ARTS WRITER

They are the hottest band on the planet right now. Their music has people enthusiastic again and people are buying their most recent CD in bunches. They've topped the Billboard chart for the last three weeks and they've sold over five million copies of the disc so far, adding a little over a half-million per week. There are no DJ's in the mix, no angry boy rants screaming on the mic, no cute boy band harmonies and no giggle and jiggle females taking a guest turn to spike sales. They are white hot, they make pop music with brains and they are on the top of the world, ma.

They are The Beatles. Who'da thunk it.

Yeah, believe it or not, The Beatles are all the rage again as the group's "One"—a collection of the band's number one singles in America — is outselling all of the best selling artists in contemporary pop including 'N Sync, The Backstreet Boys, Snoop Dogg, Limp Bizkit and Creed. It's a strange phenomenon, but these are very strange times indeed in the pop music world. It seems people are getting burned out from the angry hip-hop/metal and sugary pop and embracing good songwriting and melodies once again.

Maybe. Or maybe The Beatles are The Beatles are The Beatles. In other words, the makers of some of the greatest music in the mid to late 20th century created songs that live on and now the band's catalog is being passed to a new generation while being embraced once again by the people who grew up on it. "One," which was thought of as a sure shot Christmas present when it came out in November, is still blowing out the doors of record shops around the country. It's really a pretty amazing feat.

"It was the number two or three record when it came out but it's been number one for us ever since," says Darren Boylan a manager at the HMV in Harvard Square. Of course, the Square is the perfect demographic for The Beatles as it does draw well-heeled boomers, but Boylan says that the sales the store has chalked up has surpassed anything they could have imagined.

"We've been selling hundreds each week and that's unbelievable. It's interesting because while it seems that it would be a sure big seller because we are talking about The Beatles here, it also is a really fine collection. All the songs have been remastered and the sound is quite good. Now people have the convenience of having all of these

Merger joins two South Shore real estate boards

They've had the urge to merge for some time now.

And as of Jan. 1, the South Shore Association of Realtors and the Plymouth County Board of Realtors have combined the considerable forces of the two groups, becoming the third largest professional organization for realtors in the state.

"People said we couldn't put these two boards together," said Elizabeth Rowe, 2001 president of the new organization which will be called the Plymouth and South Shore Board of Realtors.

Rowe sees nothing but good things on the horizon now that the two boards have merged. "This groups knows no bounds. It is a tremendous group of talent and we will tap it."

The merger and name change is expected to be approved by the National Association of Realtors in about 60 days.

The newly united organization will boast 1,600 real estate professionals and will stretch from the Cape Cod Canal to Quincy, with some members from the Brockton area.

It was in October that the two boards gave their resounding support to the merger which had been talked about for years.

Rowe, of Hingham, a real estate sales associate with Coastal Countryside Properties based in Cohasset, applauded the merger for several reasons.

She officially took over the reins of the new organization at an installation ceremony and dinner for new officers held on Jan. 12 at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham.

Rowe said the larger, more powerful realtor organization will be able to provide additional services for its members.

"We plan to enhance the professionalism for realtors and enhance our image with the public," she said.

This will involve education and training workshops for realtors and opportunities

The 'keys' to her success

Piano teacher extraordinaire Margaret Li at the keys with student Anne Walsh of Hull.

Local piano teacher's classes are a sell-out

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Getting a spot in one of Margaret Li's piano classes at the South Shore Conservatory is like trying to get tickets to a Rolling Stones concert— very tough, but well worth the price of admission once you get in.

Like a Rolling Stones concert, Li's classes are generating a lot of excitement and are selling out.

But unlike Mick Jagger's legendary band which has been rocking for nearly four decades, Li, 30, has only been teaching locally for four months.

Li came to the conservatory in September from New York, and started offering her piano classes right away. She offered one 10-week session at the Conservatory's Hingham campus and one session at the Duxbury campus. The classes were advertised as "beginner piano lessons," and they filled up quickly.

By the time the first sessions were over, Li's students were excelling and she was ready to advertise another round of classes. Not only did the classes fill up almost immediately, but there is now a lengthy waiting list of students eager to learn at Li's side.

She's considering adding summer lessons to her schedule and Li said she'll continue teaching at the conservatory's two campuses as long as there is a demand and the staff keeps her on.

More than her innovative teaching methods, Li gives credit to the conservatory in making her piano classes a sell-out.

"I've got to give the conservatory a lot of credit for the success of these classes," Li said. "They gave the classes a lot of publicity. After I finished teaching the first session of the classes, they told me they wanted me to offer it again, and so I am. I love doing it, so I'll keep going as long as I can."

"This is very different from what I expected," stated Hingham resident Dawn D'Alelio regarding participating in one of Li's 10-week sessions. "Taking this class appealed to me because it didn't demand an impossible commitment."

And Li certainly doesn't want people to feel like playing the piano is an impossible dream.

"Something like this should be accessible to everyone," Li said. "And I find teaching extremely rewarding—it's what I want to do on a full-time basis. And when it comes to the piano classes, I'm trying to show people, regardless of age or background, that they're able to express themselves at the keyboard."

So why is Li so popular? Maybe it's her warm personality. Maybe it's because of her remarkable knowledge regarding classical piano. Or maybe it's because she encourages mess-ups.

"I teach people that it's okay, sometimes even better, to make mistakes while learning the piano," she said. "You can learn more that way. As a teacher, I don't feel like I can demand perfection because to me, perfection doesn't exist.

"To me, one of the best things is seeing one of my students accomplishing something he or she thought they would never be able to do. It's always a positive reinforcement."

Margaret Li, piano teacher at the South Shore Conservatory

Aside from that, I don't feel like I do that much differently from any other piano teacher. I have basic rules I follow whenever I teach. I'm always open to whatever happens with a student, and I'm always receptive and enthusiastic."

Li said when she teaches her students, she looks at music and the keys of the piano as a sort of language.

"It's a language that is universal," Li said. "But in order to express that concept, one must learn how that language is organized. I split that language into two camps—pitch and organization. I work with students on those two separate concepts and then we put them back together."

Within her classes, Li teaches everything a beginner needs to know about starting to play the piano, including reading music.

"I expect people to come into these classes knowing essentially nothing," Li said.

Li's love of music was kindled at a very young age.

"I started playing piano when I was five," she said. "It's just always been a part of my life. It's always been around me. It's what I do."

Li grew up in Long Island, N.Y., along with twin sister Edwina, who is also a piano virtuoso. Li said sometimes, she and her sister perform duets together in public.

After high school, Li attended Wellesley College in Massachusetts where she held a double major in music and Chinese language and literature. She graduated with a BA in music.

"When I went to Wellesley, I fell in love with the Boston area and I promised myself I'd be back," Li said.

After she graduated from Wellesley, Li attended Michigan State University, and got her Masters degree in piano performance. While she was in Michigan, Li started doing some private piano teaching, and also started teaching some classes at Michigan State University.

"Those were my first official teaching jobs," Li said.

After returning to Long Island, Li began applying for teaching jobs. She heard from the South Shore Conservatory in September, giving her the perfect reason to return to the Boston area she fell in love with during her years in college.

Li, who lives in Weymouth, and her sister, now both hold positions as full-time faculty members at the conservatory and she couldn't be happier about it.

"I love doing what I'm doing," Li said. "And even if a student comes to me knowing nothing about the piano, I'd expect that student to come away from the (piano) classes being able to read and understand basic piano pieces. To me, one of the best things is seeing one of my students accomplishing something he or she thought they would never be able to do. It's always a positive reinforcement."

For more information on Margaret Li's current or future piano classes, call the Hingham branch of the South Shore Conservatory at (781) 749-7565 or the Duxbury branch at (781) 934-2731.

Paying homage to Hedda

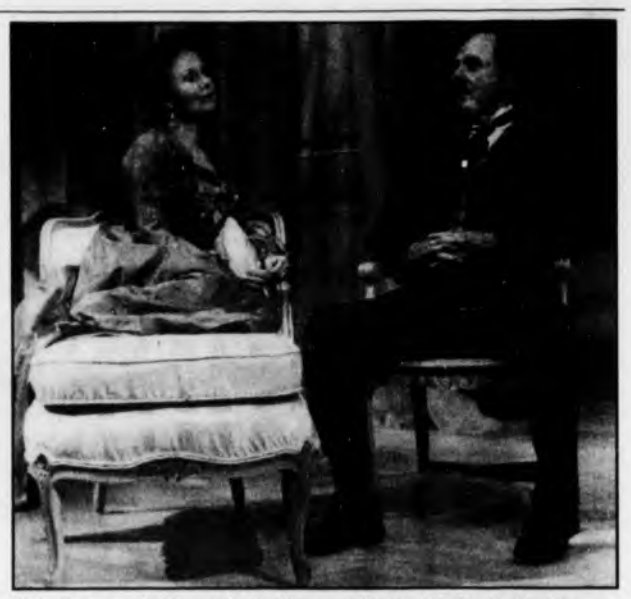
South Shore teen has role in 'mirror' production

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

It has long been said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. If so, then the nine Massachusetts high school students involved in the Huntington Theatre Company's "Mirror Performance Project" are paying genuine homage to the current Boston production of "Hedda Gabler."

One of three of the Huntington's after-school education programs, the five-year-old "Mirror Performance Project" affords high school students the opportunity to "mirror" the collaborative process which takes place between a play's director, actors, designers, costumers and theater technicians.

"We're exploring the entire process," explains program participant Emma Stanton, a junior at Duxbury High School. "We're learning the lines, the blocking and everything else that goes into putting on a play."



According to Linda Murphy, Assistant Director of Education for the Huntington, "mirroring the process is most important. It is not so much copying, but actually observing and learning from the professionals. The students tour the theater, meet the actors, and see the technical aspects of the production up close. Ultimately, they take on the roles of actors and stage managers to rehearse select scenes from the production they are mirroring. Finally, the completed scenes are performed at schools and community centers and at the Huntington's own rehearsal space."

What the students will be emulating this year is the Huntington production of "Hedda Gabler," a classic of the modern theater. Written in 1890 by Henrik Ibsen, the play is an examination of a proud and complex woman searching for passion and meaning in her life. Trapped by boredom and social convention, Hedda embarks upon a destructive journey of manipulation, forever altering the lives of those around her. The Huntington production of "Hedda Gabler" is a new adaptation by Jon Robin Baitz, which was first presented at the Williamstown Theater Festival last summer. The Huntington's recently appointed Artistic Director Nicholas Martin once again directs his Williamstown cast in this remounting.

"I love this play," says Stanton. "I am so glad we are working on 'Hedda Gabler.' We had a chance to see this production before we really began to dig into our work and it is truly fabulous." Under the direction of Murphy, the nine students have been meeting twice a week since early December when they had their first read-through of the play. Last week, the group met with Nicholas Martin and also had a working dinner with their adult counterparts, including award-winning actress Kate Burton who plays the title role.

Actress Jennifer Van Dyck, right, of the Huntington Theatre Company's "Hedda Gabler", discussed her craft recently with students Emma Stanton, Duxbury High School, at left, and Astride Noel from Newton North High School. The young women are taking part in a Huntington education program in which they "mirror" the current Boston production of the Henrik Ibsen classic.

Kate Burton as Hedda and Harris Yulin as Judge Brack in the Huntingdon Theatre Company's production of Henrik Ibsen's Hedda Gabler. Hedda Gabler runs through Jan. 28.

"It was amazing to be able to meet with and relate to the professionals," according to Stanton. "Nicholas Martin is this very hot director right now here and in New York, but he still made us all feel very comfortable. He was very down to earth and amusing. Kate Burton and the other actors were wonderful, too. It was very helpful to meet with the cast, because they are all such accomplished performers."

Murphy says the admiration is mutual. "The actors were very willing to share their expertise. They really enjoyed having dinner with the students and discussing the play and their craft in general. There was a real atmosphere of mutual interest and respect."

On Jan. 31 and Feb. 1, the students will perform 45-minute programs composed of seven selected scenes from the beginning, middle and end of the play. The students will tour on the final day, bringing their production to area high schools which may include Boston Latin and Newton North.

"We take them on tour, because we want them to have the complete theater experience," Murphy points out. "Throughout the eight weeks we work with them, the students gain a sound, practical understanding of the creative process."

It is that process that has intrigued Stanton since she was just a young girl. She has appeared in productions of "A Christmas Carol" and "The Miracle Worker" at the Company Theatre in Norwell. Stanton is also active in The Academy of the Company Theatre where she participates in the advanced youth acting group led by teacher Peter Carey of Randolph.

Stanton's father, Timothy, is an oceanographer at the Wood's Hole Institute, while her mother, Cynthia Simmons, is a professor of Russian Language and Literature at Boston College. Her 19-year-old brother, Liam, is a student at B.C. Stanton sees college in her future, but also envisions a life in the theater.

"Acting is definitely in my future plans," she says. "I know I have to do something in the theater, because the stage is the place where I can step away from everything else that may be going on in my life. It is a real outlet for me. I also loving playing off of live audiences and sharing the experience with them."

(For tickets to the Huntington Theatre Production of "Hedda Gabler," which runs through Jan. 28 call the box office at 617/266-0800. Company Theatre serves up fresh Juice

New albums show Newton's deep country roots

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

If you think you know Juice Newton only from her early '80s hit-making days, you might want to think again.

Newton is best known for a string of high-charting country-pop crossover hits and star appearances on "Solid Gold" from back in the day. Among her biggest were two top ten smashes — a synth-powered cover of Merilee Rush's '60s hit "Angel of the Morning" and the peppy "Queen of Hearts," plus the rollicking "Love's Been a Little Bit Hard on Me" and a cover of the Brenda Lee hit "Break It To Me Gently."

But most recently, Newton, now 49, has returned from a nine-year break from recording and touring with two fresh albums that have redefined her sound with much deeper country and roots music influences, particularly on her latest release, 1999's American Girl. The near decade-long layoff, during which the singer devoted time to her family, has proved beneficial for Newton in her growth as a singer and country-based artist.

Therefore, explained Juice in a recent phone interview from a Utah resort, fans can expect a lot more than just the typical routine of oldies hits when she plays Norwell's Company Theatre Friday and Saturday (Jan. 19 and 20) evenings.

"I'm working with independent country and folk music labels and producers now, rather than the big corporate majors," said the singer. "And because of that, I'm able to pick and choose songs and styles because I like them, not because they're committee-decided. My biggest successes were mainly in the pop market during the '80s. But these days, I get a lot more attention and airplay from the adult contemporary and country radio stations, and I feel comfortable saying I'm a part of that."

Newton had several more hits and released nearly a dozen albums with Capitol and RCA Records through the early '90s. There were also several earlier LPs with the singer's original band, Silver Spur, in the mid to late '70s. But in her major label career, the typical high-gloss commercial production of Newton's albums eventually seemed too country for the mainstream and too mainstream for country, and the singer's career faded as the '90s dawned.

Today, however, Newton seems a lot less like yesterday's news and a lot more like a precursor to current country crossover queens such as Shania Twain and Faith Hill, having broken the ground from country to pop as far back as 1980.

The American Girl disc confirms Newton's new, more progressive musical direction. The title track is not a cover of the well-known Tom Petty song, but rather "Hot Blooded American Girl," a passionate plea with a big-drum, rock-country sound. But there is a more obscure cover from the Petty songbook, "Keepin' Me Alive," plus hot and cool countrified updates of Queen's "Crazy Little Thing Called Love" and the Everly Brothers' hit "Love Hurts," and songs by ace country writers Nanci Griffith and Buck Owens. There's even the adventurous, swing-blues flavored Newton original, "Nighttime Without You," which comes on like a cross between country and the Cherry Poppin' Daddies.

"Songs like the Buck Owens' tune, for example, are very simple and straightforward, and recording it really gave me a chance to get into and get a sense of Buck's personality, a feel for that whole Bakersfield sound."

Juice Newton

"Artists in not only country but other genres usually make four or five albums, then they change producers to keep their sound moving forward. Years ago, when I was having the hits and playing a pink guitar, I think in my own way I made an awareness that women artists can have roots in country, but not necessarily be limited or labeled by that. And looking at today's music scene, I think it's cool that there are a lot of consumers and fans not limited by what radio and the record companies tell them to buy. Even with the whole Napster controversy, I think that it only helps artists get wider exposure and eventually sell more. I look at song-swapping on Napster that same way as that I lend my CDs to others for them to play. I'm not afraid of it," Newton said.

On her current tour, which is booked into May, Newton promises a good-time, high-energy show offering a mix of the old and new.

"I've always enjoyed playing live onstage. And these days, like in the '80s, I've got a great touring band, called the Regenerators," she said. "Our show doesn't rely on the typical whistles and bells, and smoke and mirrors. It relies mostly on the music. And I think that we're more of an alternative act in that sense, and that flavor comes across to the audience."

(Juice Newton will perform Friday, Jan. 19 and Saturday, Jan. 20 at 8 p.m. For ticket information call the Company Theater at (781) 871-2787. The Company Theatre is located at 30 Accord Park Drive in Norwell.)

songs together for the first time in a package they can listen to without having to deal with outtakes or other filler that usually comes when old music is re-released. And while there's no doubt that many kids probably bought it for their parents for the holidays, a lot are also buying it for themselves. So it's crossing generations and that's pretty rare these days."

He pauses and adds "and I guess the bottom line, though, is that it is all great music. There's a reason people call it classic rock."

Yes indeed, there's a whole radio format for that kind of music and The Beatles' resurgence has certainly affected WZLX-FM 100.3, Boston's classic rock station. "You can tell in our ratings," says Carter Alan, assistant music director at 'ZLX and afternoon DJ. "It's been great for us and while we always get Beatles' requests, we're seeing more now. For the most part, we've focused on "Sgt. Pepper's" on, but now we're getting more requests for mid-era Beatles like "Rubber Soul" and in my mind, that's great."

Alan, who has written a book about U2 and stays very current with the contemporary pop and rock scene, also feels that the boffo sales of The Beatles disc has a lot to do with listeners' dissatisfaction with most of the new music out these days. "The alternative just isn't strong enough," he says. "The music out there kind of pales in comparison and The Beatles sound fresh. Obviously, it's a really great CD all around and it takes some of the band's best work, but no one is making strong, cohesive records anymore and that's reflected in people flocking to `One.' There's a wild synchronicity going on as the older listeners are revisiting their past while the younger listeners discovering some of this music for the first time. You have all consumers coming together and that's the makings of a phenomenon."

For 17-year-old James Helton from Weston, buying "One" at the Sam Goody in the Natick Mall, the record gives him the chance to actually sit down and absorb the music for the first time. His view, is no doubt, reflected by the thousands of other teenagers picking up the CD to do some serious stereophonics in these dead days of winter.

"The thing about a lot of these songs is that I have always heard a lot of them while doing a lot of other things, but I really don't remember actually listening to them," he says after just purchasing the disc along with Lenny Kravitz's "Greatest Hits."

"A lot of the early stuff you see on specials about The Beatles on television or you hear on the radio sometimes when you're channel surfing, but how often have you really just listened to stuff like `I Wanna Hold You're Hand' or 'Help.' I know I haven't, so I'm looking forward to doing that and I guess the sound is really great too, so for me, it's kind of perfect. I've always like the later stuff like `Let It Be' but now I'm gonna check out all of it."

Ultimately, there's no real secret or mystery as to why The Beatles are all the rage again. It's the same reason people go back to Hemingway, back to Miles, back to Fellini and Bergman. Great work is great work and it can't be denied. Think of a way to market it and people will respond to it with more gusto and intensity than the junk we are usually fed in popular culture.

"You can't deny the music," says longtime devotee and one of Boston's number one Beatles' fan Cha-chi Loprette, director of promotions at alternative rock WBCN-FM 104.1. "This is timeless and the songs are brilliant. Think of all the acts they have influenced in modern rock like Oasis and how many bands try to replicate The Beatles' sound but ultimately can't. I mean think of how many of today's rock bands' songs will sell or even be around 40 years from now. The answer is probably none. That's not a reflection so much on the music of today, although most of it doesn't rank with the standard The Beatles set, as much as how great the band was. You put all their number one hits together and, of course, it's going to sell. People know what's good and what isn't."

Panna cotta

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Although I have seen traditional custards (thickened with eggs) called panna cotta on restaurant menus, panna cotta is nothing more than a sweetened, flavored milk and cream mixture which is thickened with gelatin. There are no eggs and no cooking. This makes it one of the simplest dessert recipes and one with which few Americans are familiar.

The problem with panna cottas is getting just the right amount of gelatin so that they set up properly without being rubbery. I tried varying amounts of gelatin, from 2 1/2 to 5 teaspoons per 4 cups of dairy and finally settled on 2 3/4 teaspoons. This is just enough gelatin to produce a cohesive panna cotta which can be unmolded although it is easier to simply serve this dessert in a wine glass which requires no unmolding. Higher amounts of gelatin quickly turn a soft, luscious dessert into something rubbery and unpleasant.

I tried confectioner's sugar instead of granulated and did not like the taste so I stuck with the latter. Some recipes suggest using a flavored oil (such as almond oil) to grease the ramekins but I found that butter was superior for release and the oil did not add much in the way of flavor.

I played with the relative proportion of milk to cream and found that a 50/50 ratio was a bit thin whereas a 3 to 1 ratio of cream to milk was about right.

The other problem is flavor. You need enough sugar to punch the flavor and just a bit of lemon or orange peel steeped in the milk/cream mixture (as suggested by many recipes) doesn't really do it. Today◊s ultra-pasteurized cream doesn◊t have much flavor so older recipes which depended on the cream itself to make the dessert delicious have to be revised.

First, I found that for simple variations, the use of orange or lemon oil is recommended. Unlike extracts which contain a great deal of alcohol and off flavors, oils are strong and clean tasting. They are easier to use and vastly better than using rind as a flavoring. I tested the use of rosewater or orange flower water instead of extracts or oils and discovered that the flavors were too subtle to stand up to the cream.

Another trick for flavoring is to use a caramel sauce in the ramekins as one does for Creme Caramel. This made a great counterpoint to the rich custard and balances the flavors nicely. (See the variation below.)

Finally, I tried steeping the milk/cream mixture with toasted almonds but the flavor was too mild to show up against the cream.

PANNA COTTA

This dessert depends on the quality of the cream. Regular pasteurized cream usually tastes better than the ultrapasteurized variety. I strongly suggest using an orange or lemon oil for this dessert – the plain vanilla version will be a bit plain unless served with some sort of sauce or fresh fruit.

Note that the amount of gelatin listed here will produce a relatively soft panna cotta which tastes better than those made with more gelatin but which may be a bit tricky to unmold. If you want to serve this recipe on a plate rather than in a wine glass and want the panna cotta to retain its shape, increase the gelatin to 3 teaspoons although it will be slightly less appealing when eaten. If you use the higher amount of gelatin, you can also unmold the panna cotta after only three or four hours of chilling.

2 3/4 teaspoons unflavored gelatin (see note above)
1 cup whole milk
3 cups heavy cream
1/ 2 cup sugar
2 teaspoons vanilla extract or 1 teaspoon orange or lemon oil
1/8 teaspoon salt
Fresh berries or fruit sauce for serving

1. In a small bowl, sprinkle the gelatin over 1/ 4 cup of the milk. Let stand until softened, about 5 minutes. Butter eight 1/ 2-cup ramekins and set aside on a tray.

2. Place the rest of the milk, the cream, and the sugar in a 2 quart saucepan over medium heat. Bring just to a boil and remove from heat. Add about a half cup of the hot liquid to the gelatin mixture and whisk to dissolve and then pour the gelatin mixture back into the hot milk/cream. Add the vanilla, and salt and then whisk mixture again to combine.

3. Strain the mixture through a fine-mesh sieve into a large measuring cup. Add the flavoring and stir to combine. Divide between the prepared ramekins and cover with plastic wrap. Refrigerate until set, at least 5 hours. (The ramekins can also sit overnight.)

4. To serve, run a knife around the edge of each custard, and shake or tap the ramekins to loosen completely. Invert onto chilled dessert plates. Serve with fresh fruit (berries or segmented oranges) or a simple fruit sauce. This dessert can also be served without unmolding if chilled, for example, in wine glasses.

BUTTERMILK VARIATION

Substitute 1/2 cup buttermilk for 1/2 cup of heavy cream in the master recipe.

ALMOND VARIATION

Substitute 1 teaspoon almond extract for the vanilla extract.

CARDAMOM ORANGE VARIATION

Use 1 teaspoon orange oil for the flavoring in the master recipe and also add 1/4 teaspoon ground cardamom to the strained mixture.

CARAMEL SAUCE VARIATION

Prepare the panna cotta according the master recipe to the point that it is ready to pour into the ramekins. Combine 3/ 4-cup sugar and 1/ 4-cup water in a heavy-bottomed saucepan over medium-high heat. Cook to a light caramel which will take 5 to 10 minutes. Once the sugar syrup mixture starts to darken, remove it from the heat and swirl the contents of the pan. Place it back on the heat for a few seconds at a time and then remove and swirl. Continue until you have a light brown caramel sauce. Remove from heat and add 2 tablespoons water, stirring quickly. Pour about 1 tablespoon caramel into each ramekin, tilting quickly to cover the bottom. Add the warm panna cotta mixture on top and chill until set, at least 4 hours. —

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17

A Scorpio moon today and tomorrow may generate stormy emotional weather. Don't force issues. Keep a low profile. On the other hand, the Scorpio moon brings a time when you can be most productive and get big work projects out of the way. Take on a busy schedule. Today the moon aligns with Mercury at 11:55 a.m., Mars at 5:20 p.m. and Venus at 5:53 p.m. Plan a quiet evening. Look within, and you will find what you need to get back on track.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18

A lunar opposition to Saturn warns you to wake up in a good mood this morning. Others may be moody and difficult to get along with. Although this is not a great day for socializing, it is one of the best for getting things done. An applying alignment of Mercury to Pluto aids projects that need problem-solving. Tackle jobs that have been difficult and troublesome; you can work out the glitches and find new solutions. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain new awareness and find inner peace. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 8:44 p.m. until 10:35 p.m., when a Sagittarius moon takes over.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19

An applying 90-degree alignment of Mercury/Mars impacts this day. Slow your pace. Sidestep irritability. Think before you say or do something you will later regret. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until tomorrow. Stay busy with odd jobs, chores and errands. The moon continues to travel in Sagittarius. The sun moves into the sign Aquarius at 7:16 p.m., remaining there until February 18.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20

Storm clouds move out, and sunny astrological weather arrives today. The combination of a Sagittarius moon and sun/Jupiter alignment generates high energy, optimism, enthusiasm. You can launch important ventures between 5:00 a.m.-1:18 p.m., when the moon becomes inactive. The day is best, however, for enjoying favorite hobbies, sports, friends. Go with your adventurous side. Spur of the moment ideas can be the most successful. Be a free spirit; follow your bliss.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21

The moon enters Capricorn at 9:57 a.m. The planetary ruler of Capricorn, Saturn, is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for direct travel on Wednesday, January 24. Focus on responsibilities you have taken on or commitments you have made; now is the time to follow through. An applying alignment of Mercury to Uranus urges you to keep an open mind; be willing to experiment with new ideas, techniques. This influence is great for troubleshooting, brainstorming.

Yesterday's advice pertains to today as well. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. Hard work will pay off. The moon continues its travel in Capricorn, and a Mercury/Uranus alignment culminates at 2:35 p.m. A lunar contact to Mars makes this a great evening to burn the midnight oil catching up on work projects or studies.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 23

Hard work, self-discipline, attention to duty continue to be principal themes today. Rather than worrying about situations that are out of your control, focus on matters you can do something about. Repay debts, fulfill promises. Make up a list of things to do and stay busy. The Capricorn moon aligns with Saturn at 10:38 a.m. and becomes inactive. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 10:43 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 24

The new moon culminates at 8:07 a.m., 4 1/2-degrees of Aquarius. Generally the light side of a new moon is an ideal time for launching new activities. However, there are a few planetary alignments that warn against making important decisions or signing contracts. There are likely to be delays or unexpected obstacles; you may not have all the facts. Today the Aquarius moon interacts with Neptune at 11:21 a.m. The planet Saturn, standing at 24-degrees of Taurus, begins direct travel at 7:24 p.m.

Jay Geils plays the MFA

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

There was a time, many years before guitarist Jay Geils led his own self-titled band — behind the vocal and physical antics of Peter Wolf — to the heights of rock 'n' roll, when he really wasn't sure about which instrument to play. He knew, since his father was a big jazz fan who constantly played Count Basie and Benny Goodman and others in the house, that music would most likely be a part of his life. Conveniently, growing up in New Jersey, when you reached the third grade, you were entitled to free music lessons and inexpensive instrument rentals. And his parents told him he could pick whatever instrument he liked.

"I had seen Louis Armstrong on TV," recalls Geils from his home in Groton. "And I said, 'Well, he looks pretty cool. And it's only got three valves on it, how hard can it be?' So I picked the trumpet."

Which he quickly caught the hang of. Then he taught himself how to play the chord organ, then the drums. During one summer vacation he borrowed a baritone saxophone from the school band and taught himself to play.

"There was also an old plastic ukulele laying around the house," says Geils. "And I started playing that. Eventually my father brought home a cheapo Harmony archtop guitar, and I just got into it."

He initially got into it as an acoustic player, enrolling at Northeastern University just as the mid-'60s folk revival swept through Boston and Cambridge.

"I didn't do very well at school," says Geils. "But I became a pretty good guitar player."

A transfer to Worcester Tech hooked him up with a couple of budding musicians — bassist Danny Klein and harpist Magic Dick — both of whom would later join the J. Geils Band. But even at that point, as the three guys started up an acoustic blues jug band, Geils, who would go on to bring new life to old blues standards and perform some blistering rock, had long had his heart in jazz.

"When I was in high school I had that meeting with the guidance counselor," he recalls. "And she said, 'Well, Jay, what do think you'd like to be?' And I had two choices: jazz musician or race car driver. And she said, 'Well, maybe you ought to go to college and get your degree, and then you can decide.' So I went to college, but as soon as I got off on my own I was just totally smitten with music. I got deeply into the blues thing because that was what was really happening in Boston in the late '60s and early '70s. But I was always a jazz fan."

Geils has always known his jazz guitarists, and is a huge fan of Charlie Christian. He'll be sharing his knowledge and enthusiasm for the man who first revolutionized jazz by plugging his guitar into an amplifier in "An Evening With Jay Geils and Duke Robillard," part of the Museum of Fine Arts show, "Dangerous Curves: Art of the Guitar."

"As early as 1939 Charlie was improvising in a way that was really hinting at what was to come, almost more than the so-called pioneers of bebop like Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker," says Geils. "To me, he's a major cat because he immediately made sense out of how to play modern improvised music on an instrument that had only just been invented. Nobody else in the history of music has done that.

"Charlie played the ES-150," continues Geils, before launching into a history lesson. "You could buy that guitar anywhere. It was mass marketed. It's called an ES-150 because ES stands for Electric Spanish as opposed to the EH-150 which was an Electric Hawaiian — a lap steel. And 150 is the price — $150. My ES-150 is in the museum show."

Pressed to name his favorite part of the exhibit, it's no surprise that he doesn't choose Rick Nielsen's quintuple-necked Hamer. Geils goes for the older classics.

"I'm real fond of those big handcrafted archtops from the '30s, '40s and '50s," he says. "And there's one display area with four really cool archtops in it — a Stromberg, a D'Angelico, a Gibson and a Gretsch. I like that."

He and Robillard are scheduled to play at the museum, but also to talk.

"They told us they didn't want a concert," he explains. "They wanted us to talk about what we know about the electric guitar and have some repartee between the audience and ourselves. So it's like a clinic-lecture-demonstration-Q&A-I don't know what you call it. We're just gonna try to explain how, when you hear Charlie Christian playing electric guitar in 1939, that became Eric Clapton in 1999."

Jay Geils is a longtime fan of guitarist Charlie Christian.

Geils, who refers to himself as semi-retired — he sold his vintage car restoration business a few years ago — still plays blues with former Geils Band harpist Magic Dick in Bluestime, and gigs to a different beat with Robillard and fellow guitarist Gerry Beaudoin in the New Guitar Summit.

"I've know Duke for a long time," says Geils. "And I met Gerry at one of the Boston guitar shows and we talked and played and I started sitting in with him at his gigs from time to time. And he's been friendly with Duke for a while. One time the three of us were up there playing at the Rendezvous in Waltham and people said we sounded pretty good, so we formed this band.

"And we're playing jazz standards," he adds excitedly. "So after all these years, I'm playing jazz. I've finally gotten to what I wanted to do when I was a junior in high school."

"An Evening with Jay Geils and Duke Robillard" is at the Museum of Fine Arts on Jan. 17 at 7:30 p.m. in conjunction with "Dangerous Curves: Art of the Guitar." Tickets are $40. Call (617) 369-3770."

Music lovers, don't fret

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

If you've ever owned a guitar, liked the feeling of strumming a chord, or reveled in the resonating sound of a set of new strings, there's only one place to go — the Museum of Fine Arts (MFA) in Boston for the "Dangerous Curves: Art of the Guitar" exhibit.

Even people with no interest in music whatsoever are bound to marvel at the hundreds of unique guitars on display at the show, all of which possess their own amazing artistic attributes.

Some of the instruments on display at the show are very plain in their beauty, such as the collection of 17th century acoustic guitars that retrace the roots of the instrument's history. One of the earliest models on display is from 1628.

Over the years there have been some creative variations of the guitar, including guitars with alligators skillfully painted on them, guitars that light up like the floor of a disco, guitars and harps synthesized into one instrument, and even guitars with five necks on them.

There are also plenty of celebrity guitars at the event including one of Joe Perry's (of Aerosmith) first acoustic guitars, a Jimi Hendrix's Gibson "Flying V" model guitar, and an old guitar once owned by John Lennon.

The bottom line is that anyone who has any interest in guitar-driven music owes it to themselves to check out the "Dangerous Curves" exhibit, simply because it chronicles many eras of great music and reflects many eras of great art work.

Being a guitar player myself, I was excited when I got tickets to the show. But when I walked through the doors of the MFA and saw the exhibit for myself, I was unable to pick up my jaw as it dropped to the floor.

Before anyone goes into the exhibit, they are given a headset which provides the audio-narration for the show, compliments of James Taylor. The headset also provides exhibit-goers with various pieces of classical, rockabilly, and rock 'n' roll music to listen to while walking through the show. I, for one, definitely liked the idea of being my own tour guide in that sense.

The other thing I particularly enjoyed was having the opportunity to walk around and enjoy the show at my own pace. Imagine that.

It was not overcrowded, as groups of people are only allowed into the exhibit every 30 minutes. To me, one of the worst things is taking the time to go see something, and not being able to see it at all — that didn't happen at the "Dangerous Curves" show.

Finally, you won't be gypped at the exhibit in terms of content. There's hundreds of guitars to look at, all of which are bound to keep you hypnotized for a long time. Even though the show is only spread through two large rooms, it kept me busy for about two hours.

The "Dangerous Curves" exhibit will run through Feb. 25, so there's still plenty of time to check it out, but make sure you get your tickets in advance.

It's just too good to miss.

General admission to the MFA is $12 for adults, $10 for seniors and $5 for children ages 7-17. For more information on ticket prices to Dangerous Curves: Art of the Guitar call the MFA at (617) 267-9300 or log onto the website at www.mfa.org. Tickets to the exhibit can also be purchased by calling (617) 542-4MFA.

IN BRIEF

Workshop on starting your own business

The Plymouth Area Chamber of Commerce and SEED Corporation present two introductory free workshops on starting your own business. The first session is on Thursday, Feb. 8 and the second will be held on Wednesday, Feb. 21. Registration is at 6 p.m., the workshop from 6:30 to 9 p.m. at the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce, 225 Water St., #500, Plymouth. Call 508-830-1620 or 508-822-1020 by Feb. 6.

First-time homebuyers

Neighborhood Housing Services, an approved first-time homebuyer counseling agency, will hold an accredited and MHFA certified first-time homebuyers' workshop in cooperation with The Weymouth Banking Collaborative Saturday, Feb. 3, and Saturday, Feb. 10. The workshop will be held at South Shore Savings Bank, 1530 Main Street, Weymouth from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m. Attendance at both workshops is mandatory to receive a home-buying certificate which is required by most lenders to qualify for the many different mortgage options such as the Mass Housing Finance Agency, Soft Second Programs, down payment and closing costs grants and other special first-time homebuyer financing options.

Neighborhood Housing Services is a non-profit organization dedicated to assisting first-time buyers through the home-buying process. The staff at NHS is unique in their approach to obtaining down payment and closing costs assistance as well as rehab grants for their clients, which are available throughout the entire South Shore area. Don't miss this opportunity to find out how you or someone you know can buy a home with little or no money down.

The agenda will be comprehensive and individualized. The focus will be on the many changing aspects of home buying, including how to locate a property within your budget, how to make an offer and determining the best mortgage program for your needs. Advanced registration is required and space is limited. A $10 refundable registration fee is required.

Call Debbie Kidd at (617) 770-2387, Ext. 24 or Janice Tucker at (617) 770-2227, Ext. 22 for more information and to register for this workshop.

Barrett, Gray earn proficiency in technology

Two sales agents in Jack Conway & Co.'s Marshfield office recently received the Conway Computer Institute (CCI) designation, an honor they obtained after completing 36 hours of intensive coursework in using technology to better serve real estate customers.

Technology Director Toni Manning and Executive Vice President Thomas Rudolph recently awarded CCI certificates and pins to Mani Barrett and Susan Gray, both of whom work in the Conway office on Route 139 in Marshfield.

Classes on creating mailing lists, managing client databases and using desktop publishing were taught by instructors from Massasoit Community College at Conway's in-house computer-training laboratory. Manning taught courses on navigating the Internet, effectively communicating with customers by e-mail, and a special module on Conway's state-of-the-art information management system.

After completing the requirements, the CCI designees received a $500 gift certificate to Comp USA, the computer superstore.

"Technology is so important in today's market," said Manning, adding that the CCI designation is believed to be the first of its kind to be offered by a real estate firm. "Mani and Susan have shown their commitment to education by earning this designation."

Plymouth area chamber events

The Plymouth Area Chamber of Commerce will hold a Business After Hours at Riptides Bar & Grill, Main Street, Plymouth, co-sponsored by NECLEC LLC, Thursday, Jan. 25. The event will run from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

The Plymouth Area Chamber of Commerce will host John Drew, project director for the A.D. Makepeace master planning initiative, and Fred Merrill, principal planner for the project. They will present more definitive master plan concepts, including a discussion of smart growth management principles, master planned communities, contrast between current and alternative land-use programs, as well as the creation of a new zoning overlay district. All at its Executive Club Breakfast Friday, Feb. 9, at the Sheraton Inn Plymouth, 180 Water Street, Plymouth. The program will run from 7:45 - 9 a.m.

The Chamber's Executive Club series is an opportunity for company directors and managers to network in a casual setting with their peers, while hosting a keynote speaker on a topical business issue. This event costs $20 for members, $30 for nonmembers. A full breakfast is included. Reservations are required, call (508) 830-1620 to RSVP for this event or for more information about the chamber.

MAR installs new officers

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR) recently installed its 2001 elected officers during ceremonies conducted as part of the association's Inaugural Banquet at the Sheraton Braintree.

Elected by the 117 directors of the state association, the 16 member slate will oversee the organization's activities and operation between meetings of the MAR Board of Directors and act as liaisons to the association's nine committees and work groups. Each of the newly elected officers now becomes a member of the MAR Executive Board.

The 2001 elected officers of the MAR are: President David M. Walsh of Weymouth; President elect David Drinkwater of Scituate; Secretary/Treasurer Peter Casey of Weston; Boston Region Vice President Judy Moore of Lexington; Cape Cod and Islands Region Vice President Amy Greene of South Yarmouth; Central Region Vice President Laura Shifrin of Townsend; Northern Region Vice President Lois Williams of Boxford; Southeast Region Vice President Margaret Tomkiewicz of New Bedford; Southern Region Vice President Kelly Lewis-Grossi of Dighton; and Western Region Vice President Mary Renfrew of Bernardston.

Four focus area vice presidents also have been appointed to the 2001 MAR Executive Board. They are: Realtors Carolyn Chodat of Medway; Joseph Delaney II of Canton; Linda O'Connor of Amesbury; and Beverlee Vidoli of Burlington. Also installed as members of the association's 2001 Executive Board were MAR past president Fred Meyer of Cambridge and association executive liaison Carol Shapiro of Stoneham.

Undocumented loan proved a costly mistake

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

Anthony Summers

Robert Frost in 1914 wrote, "Home is the place where, when you have to go there, they have to take you in." However, it is doubtful that Edith Sansone's daughter, Dorothy Nickerson, was a fan of Frost; otherwise, mother and daughter would still be living together, and we wouldn't be reviewing the Worcester Superior Court case of Edith Sansone vs. Dorothy Nickerson and David Kelly.

Background

Edith Sansone, the plaintiff, first met David Kelly, the defendant, in the architectural firm where they both worked. Obviously impressed with Kelly, and being a typical mother/matchmaker, she introduced Kelly to her daughter, also later named as a defendant. Nickerson had a school-age daughter by a prior marriage, and shortly, Kelly became a member of their Chelsea home.

Dissatisfied with Chelsea public schools and having little spare cash with which to purchase a new home in a town with a better school system, Kelly proposed that Sansone provide a down payment in exchange for an in -law apartment in a new house. At that time, Sansone viewed Kelly as a future son-in-law and husband for Dorothy. Further, Sansone liked the idea of moving away from Chelsea to a new residence in Saugus, and so she advanced $47,000.

In October 1991, the happy group moved into the new house, which was deeded to Kelly and Sansone as tenants in common. Strangely, Nickerson's name was not on the deed, and there was no written contract between Kelly and Sansone. How often do we discover, too late, that our business deal should have been reduced to writing? Sooner or later, we all learn that "A verbal contract isn't worth the paper its written on," as stated by Samuel Goldwyn.

Although Kelly had a town-approved plan for Sansone's in-law apartment, he somehow never got started. Living in such close proximity apparently proved too difficult for Sansone and Nickerson, and the mother/daughter friction finally resulted in Sansone's unceremonious vacating of the house in May 1992.

Shortly after moving out, Sansone deeded the property to Kelly and patiently waited for the return of her $47,000. In the meantime, Nickerson moved out, and Kelly filed for bankruptcy. When the payback was not forthcoming, Sansone sued them both for the return of her $47,000 deposit. Sansone claimed she was deceived into lending $47,000 to her daughter and Kelly upon the false promise of the construction of her own in-law apartment. Further, Sansone alleged that Nickerson and Kelly never intended to build the apartment or pay back the money, but that they did engage in behavior calculated to drive Sansone out of the house.

Discussion of law

The law will provide for the return of money if the claimant (Sansone) establishes circumstances which make it unfair (Nickerson and Kelly) not to return it. It would also be possible to recover the money if Sansone could establish that she made a loan which was not repaid. Proof must be offered to demonstrate that all parties intended that the money be repaid. If Sansone could establish the elements of a loan, the law will require the money be repaid within a reasonable time.

In order for Sansone to prevail on her allegation of deceit, she must prove that Kelly and Nickerson induced her to part with $47,000 by making a false promise to build her an in-law apartment in the new house.

Decision

Sansone has failed to prove that she loaned the money to Kelly and Nickerson. There was no promissory note or other writing which evidenced a loan. There was no evidence that Kelly and Nickerson committed deceit with reference to the plan to build an in-law apartment for Sansone. In fact, Kelly had drawn plans and had obtained a variance for the apartment. It was Sansone who moved away, making the apartment unnecessary.

With everything considered, Sansone's position seemed to be that because she decided to move out, she was entitled to the return of her $47,000 contribution. Unfortunately for Sansone, the court felt she failed to prove her case and judgment was rendered for Kelly and Nickerson.

Legal advice

When joint property owners cannot agree as to how to use their property, either one of the owners can commence a land court action called a petition to partition. This usually results in a court order to sell the property and a division of the sales proceeds in a proportion decided by the Judge. With 20/20 hindsight, Sansone should have pursued partition rather than deed the property over to Kelly.

Merger joins two South Shore real estate boards

for networking among real estate professionals, enabling them to better serve the public, Rowe said.

"A good realtor brings a lot more to the table than just showing property," Rowe said. It requires professionalism and skill to "get people through the process" of buying a home. "It's a family's biggest expense."

Betsy Hines, president elect of the recently combined organization, echoed Rowe's praise of the merger and said the new group will be a more powerful and united voice when it comes to real estate issues on Beacon Hill.

"Hopefully we'll have a lot more legislative clout," said Hines, of Betsy Hines Realtors.

Title V septic regulations and the Community Preservation Act have been of great concern to realtors over the past several years.

Joyce Baker, past president of the South Shore Association of Realtors, also sees the new organization as a more powerful political presence.

"We will be able to have larger legislative clout," she said. "We will be a voice for the real estate profession," said Baker, of CityView Real Estate in Quincy.

Other realtors attending the installation event joined the chorus of enthusiasm for the merger.

"I'm thrilled," said Donna Wood, past president of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors and a member of the board of directors of the new organization.

The advantages of a merger include sharing a Multiple Listing Service. "It just makes sense to bring everyone under one umbrella," said Wood.

Wood, co-owner of the Macdonald and Wood Real Estate group in Duxbury, agreed that a larger, united real estate organization has the potential to be a political powerhouse.

"We need a louder voice to help protect private property rights," she said. "Our voice in the legislature is one of the most important aspects of a real estate board."

Wood said increased networking opportunities and community service are other benefits of combining the two organizations.

"Community service has been an important part of our board and will continue to be for the new board," she said.

David Drinkwater, president-elect of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors, called the merger, "a step forward. It's very exciting."

Drinkwater, a partner and owner of Coastal Countryside Properties, said both groups, as a result of the merger, will benefit from reduced costs and will be in a better position to keep up with advances in technology.

"It's historic in a lot of ways," said Drinkwater. "The two groups have wanted this to happen for some time now and it met with essentially unanimous support."

He added, "It's a win-win situation."

The Plymouth and South Shore Board of Realtors will have its headquarters in Pembroke and a satellite office in Braintree. Previously the Plymouth County board was based in Pembroke and the South Shore Board of Realtors was based in Braintree.

Other 2001 officers installed last week were: Diane V. Brueggeman of Brueggeman Real Estate, vice-president; and George Raymond of Herbert Raymond and Son Realtor, treasurer.

How to Buy a Home With Absolutely No Money Down

YOUR TOWN - A new home ownership program allows qualified buyers to buy a home with absolutely no down payment.

You may have owned a home before and are presently renting, or maybe you are a first time homebuyer and need a way to break into the housing market but are holding back because you think you require $10,000, $20,000 or even more for a down payment.

Well regardless of your present situation, if you want to get into, or re-enter the housing market without having to make a cash down payment, then this new program may be just what you're looking for. Why pay your landlord's mortgage when you can be building your own equity.

Industry insiders have prepared a new special report entitled, "How to Buy a Home with Zero Down" which reveals how this new and innovative program can get you into the housing market immediately and with absolutely no down payment.

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your FREE copy of this report, call 1-800-581-1081 and enter ID#1025. Call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week and discover how you can get into the housing market NOW and with ABSOLUTELY NO DOWN PAYMENT.

IN BRIEF

Pilot Savings Program introduced

Citizens Bank announced a first-of-its-kind program with the Intentional Institute of Boston (IIB) to assist refugees with savings. The "Savings for Success" program will help refugees acquire a productive asset, such as post-secondary education, a home, a computer or car for transportation to work.

Under the program, participants will make regular contributions to a special savings account known as an "Individual Development Account," or IDA, at Citizens, the institute's financial partner. Participants' contributions are matched two-to-one, up to $2,000 for individuals and $4,000 for families. The U.S. Office of Refugee Resettlement, which is financing the program, will provide the matching funds. While five other IDA programs currently operate in Massachusetts, this is the first one targeted to refugees and asylees.

"Investing in immigrants is smart business. Our state labor force would have declined without this stream of new residents," said Citizens Bank of Massachusetts President Thomas J. Hollister.

"Refugees and asylees face many obstacles while integrating into our workforce and Citizens is eager to help them meet these challenges."

To be eligible for the program, participants must meet four criteria: 1. Refugees, asylees, or Haitian/Cuban entrants who are not yet U.S. citizens; 2. Total annual household income within 200 percent of the federal poverty level; 3. Total household net worth of less than $10,000, excluding the value of a home, and; 4. Annual earned income of at least the amount to be saved each year (minimum of $1,000 a year).

Dr. Westy Egmont, executive director of the IIB, said the partnership with Citizens underscores the value of private sector investment in Boston's immigrant. "Our economy and our society greatly benefit from the successful integration of immigrants into the greater Boston community," Dr. Egmont said.

Citizens will participate fully in this program. They will provide financial experts at money management workshops and will meet with program participants regarding their accounts, financial planning, mortgage assessment and small business loans.

Applications for the program have been mailed to nine local refugee service providers. Once the participants are selected, the accounts are expected to be opened at the end of January 2001.

Sixty accounts will be set up in January 2001. The matching funds will be provided by the U.S. Office of Refugee Resettlement and will be deposited at Citizens Bank.

Program participants will have their monthly savings account fees and service charges waived by Citizens Bank.

Citizens' partnership with the IIB is part of its ongoing efforts to support the contributions immigrants have made to the Massachusetts economy and to serve the multi-ethnic communities in Massachusetts.

In 1999, the bank sponsored a landmark study by the non-partisan think tank MassINC entitled "The Changing Workforce: Immigrants at the New Economy in Massachusetts."

Citizens conducts business in 42 different languages, and 10 percent of its employees speak English as a second language. In August, Citizens Bank became the official sponsor of the "Dreams of Freedom" exhibit at the IIB documenting the history of immigrants in Boston.

Citizens Bank of Massachusetts is a $14.9 billion bank headquartered in Boston with 148 branches in Eastern Massachusetts and commercial banking centers in Boston, Wakefield, Wobun, Quincy, Norwell, Framingham, Plymouth, Fairhaven and Hyannis. The parent company of Citizens Bank Massachusetts is Citizens Financial Group, Inc., a $30.2 billion financial services company headquartered in Providence, R.I. With more than 330 branches and 800 ATMs in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. Citizens is the second largest bank holding company in New England. it is wholly owned by The Royal Bank of Scotland Group plc.

Grow bulbs indoors for a glimpse of spring

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The sweet, intoxicating perfume of paper-white narcissus blooms greets me each morning as I enter our brightly lit breakfast room. A thoughtful holiday gift from my nephew, these sweet-smelling clusters of dainty white flowers atop slender, fleshy stems took barely more than two weeks to bloom once started. It has been many years since I have enjoyed the pristine elegance of these easily forced bulbs, and their cheerful blossoms and heavenly fragrance remind me that spring will arrive before long.

Paper-white narcissus bulbs and their yellow counterparts, Soleil d'Or, are particularly effortless and rewarding.

The process of forcing refers to a technique which makes plants bloom under conditions or at times which are not natural for those plants. Planting hardy bulbs and watching them grow and produce flower stalks indoors is a marvelous way to help the cold winter months pass more quickly. Paper-white narcissus bulbs and their yellow counterparts, `Soleil d'Or, are particularly effortless and rewarding as they can be purchased and forced without an intermediary cooling period. Growing these bulbs merely requires a shallow, non-draining container or decorative bowl filled to within an inch of the rim with pebbles, gravel, marble chips or coarse sand. Water should be

Antique Cape

This antique Cape, part of which was built in 1797, was originally part of the Asa Weston homestead located on Duck Hill Road. In 1920, the home was split apart horizontally and the second floor moved to its present location and used as a first floor with a new second floor added. Later, a two-story addition was built consisting of a family room on the first floor and a master bedroom on the second. Now the home comprises seven large rooms with the first floor consisting of living room, dining room, kitchen, family room, full bath and screened porch, and three bedrooms and a full bath on the second floor.

The well-maintained home sits on a .93-acre lot overlooking a cranberry bog and surrounded by flowering trees and bushes, lovely perennials, stone walls and brick walk. In autumn there are breathtaking views of colorful autumn foliage and crimson cranberries and in winter you can watch or join skaters glide over the frozen bog.

There were enough fine features in the chambers of the old house to fit well into the first floor of the current home. The large front-to-back living room has a fireplace with beautiful paneling above it. Throughout there are some lovely old doors and corner posts, and some of the windows reflect lavender hues denoting their age. In spite of the fact that in the necessary finishing, parts of the house are not original, the effect of the era is authentic and there is an atmosphere of the warmth of generations.

Have travel agent arrange flight/cruise

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. We are 24 people who are taking a cruise leaving Miami on Feb. 18, 2001. There are 20 people needing a flight to Miami. When is the best time to book? How can we get the best fare?

This cruise is to celebrate a 70th birthday and time cannot be changed.

A. First, you should plan to arrive the day before, especially since it's in winter and that could affect flight schedules. I hear more sob stories about people missing their ships in winter because their flight was late.

You should also ask for a group rate from whatever airline you fly, since your group is large enough. Another tip: You could save a lot of money if you fly into Fort Lauderdale instead of Miami, maybe several hundred dollars per person.

Perhaps you could arrange cheap transportation (charter a small bus even) from Fort Lauderdale to the pier. I'd call a good travel agent and ask her to arrange it all for you.

Q. I found an ad in the paper to fly anywhere in the United States for $159 per person from a company called Total Travel. However, I don't believe that these tickets are legit because at first they said they are selling Rapid Rewards (frequent-flyer) tickets and to call the airline and tell them it is a gift from a friend. They wanted cash on delivery, or a money order or cashier's check.

I decided it wasn't worth it. What do you think about this?

A. This smells fishier than week-old sushi. It's illegal to buy or sell frequent-flyer tickets or miles, although it's OK for someone to use his or her miles to obtain a ticket for a friend or relative as long as no money changes hands. You were right to steer clear.

You can often find coast-to-coast fares for $198 round trip or even less on airline Web sites or just through a travel agent, so $159 isn't even that much of a bargain.

Q. Can you recommend a reputable company that rents villas in Italy? We're especially interested in Tuscany.

A. Here are two very reliable companies that rent villas, apartments and farmhouses of all sizes throughout Italy: Italian Villas (1-800-700-9549 or www.italianvillas.com); and The Parker Company (1-800-280-2811 or www.theparkercompany.com).

Have travel agent arrange flight/cruise

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. We are 24 people who are taking a cruise leaving Miami on Feb. 18, 2001. There are 20 people needing a flight to Miami. When is the best time to book? How can we get the best fare?

This cruise is to celebrate a 70th birthday and time cannot be changed.

A. First, you should plan to arrive the day before, especially since it's in winter and that could affect flight schedules. I hear more sob stories about people missing their ships in winter because their flight was late.

You should also ask for a group rate from whatever airline you fly, since your group is large enough. Another tip: You could save a lot of money if you fly into Fort Lauderdale instead of Miami, maybe several hundred dollars per person.

Perhaps you could arrange cheap transportation (charter a small bus even) from Fort Lauderdale to the pier. I'd call a good travel agent and ask her to arrange it all for you.

Q. I found an ad in the paper to fly anywhere in the United States for $159 per person from a company called Total Travel. However, I don't believe that these tickets are legit because at first they said they are selling Rapid Rewards (frequent-flyer) tickets and to call the airline and tell them it is a gift from a friend. They wanted cash on delivery, or a money order or cashier's check.

I decided it wasn't worth it. What do you think about this?

A. This smells fishier than week-old sushi. It's illegal to buy or sell frequent-flyer tickets or miles, although it's OK for someone to use his or her miles to obtain a ticket for a friend or relative as long as no money changes hands. You were right to steer clear.

You can often find coast-to-coast fares for $198 round trip or even less on airline Web sites or just through a travel agent, so $159 isn't even that much of a bargain.

Q. Can you recommend a reputable company that rents villas in Italy? We're especially interested in Tuscany.

A. Here are two very reliable companies that rent villas, apartments and farmhouses of all sizes throughout Italy: Italian Villas (1-800-700-9549 or www.italianvillas.com); and The Parker Company (1-800-280-2811 or www.theparkercompany.com).

Grow bulbs indoors for a glimpse of spring

added to a level just below the surface of the pebbles and the bulbs set on top of the stones. Additional pebbles placed around the lower quarter of the bulbs' bases will secure them and prevent them from toppling over.

For best results, keep the narcissus bulbs in a cool location, ideally 50 to 60 degrees, with relatively low light until well-rooted and stalks begin to appear. Be sure to keep the water level just below the base of the bulbs. As the buds begin to develop, gradually move the container into bright or direct sunlight. Regrettably, once the blossoms have faded, the bulbs cannot be forced again and should be discarded.

Hyacinth bulbs offer another source of heavy-scented blossoms which can be forced and enjoyed indoors, There are attractive kits which contain precooled hyacinth bulbs and specialty vases shaped like an hourglass for growing and displaying these purple-tinted bulbs. Water is put in the lower section of the container and filled to the neck of the hourglass while the bulb sits in the upper portion of the vase, pointed end up. The wiry, white roots can be readily observed as they sprout and grow, enabling children of all ages to witness the miracles of growth usually hidden beneath the soil surface. Water should be added periodically to maintain the level just below, but not touching, the base of the bulb.

Hyacinth bulbs offer another source of heavy-scented blossoms which can be forced and enjoyed indoors.

There are many other hardy bulbs which can be readily forced. Daffodils, tulips, hyacinths, crocuses, iris, and grape hyacinths are all excellent candidates but forcing these spring beauties requires advanced planning to ensure that they receive a 14-to-15-week cooling period at 35 to 50 degrees. A spare refrigerator makes an ideal cooling chamber. If you plan to force bulbs, be sure to look for those which are specifically designated as "good for forcing" as not all bulbs respond well to this treatment.

Hardy bulbs which require cooling should be grown in containers with drainage holes in a soil mixture which provides quick drainage. If you wish to use clay pots, they should be soaked overnight prior to filling with planting medium so that their porous composition does not draw moisture out of the soil. Fill the containers loosely with soil and place the bulbs so their pointed tops are even with the container's rim. Do not firm the growing medium which should remain loose to ensure easy root development. Add soil around the bulbs, filling the pots to the rim.

Water several times with lukewarm water to settle the soil which should create a small headspace for future, watering. A 6-inch pot will accommodate three to six larger bulbs and up to 15 crocuses. Bulbs should be potted and cooled around the beginning of October for January bloom; mid-October plantings will result in February blossoms and November plantings will produce March and April flowers. It takes three to four weeks for the bulbs to bloom once they are exposed to warmth and light. Early October plantings should be moved to a warm location around Christmas for January bloom. Successive plantings can produce a continuous period of beautiful flowers all winter. Be sure to rotate the pots on a regular basis to ensure all leaves and steins receive equal light so the flower stalks do not lean toward the light.

The majority of forced bulbs should be discarded once they finish blooming as they cannot be forced again. Daffodils and grape hyacinths, however, can often be salvaged and transplanted into the garden once the ground thaws although it may be a year or two before they recover fully. Once the flowers have faded, continue to water and fertilize with a dilute, liquid soluble solution until the foliage dies. Discontinue watering and keep the dormant bulbs cool until spring. I have successfully transplanted several containers of forced bulbs given to me as gifts and they serve as lovely, sentimental reminders each spring when their cheerful blooms reappear.

Yearly overrides are on the table

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad Tuesday night to study whether it would be better in the long-run for the town to continue to use surplus funds to balance the budget, or switch to a yearly-override method.

Right now, the town uses a certain amount of its free cash and overlay surplus funds to help fund the general operating budget. This year, Haddad said more than $230,000 of overlay surplus funds will help balance the FY-2002 budget. If that money was not used to help fund the budget, the town would have to seek a $530,000 override this year, rather than the $300,000 override it's currently looking for.

An overlay surplus occurs when the town puts aside more money for property tax abatements and exemptions than needed. Free cash includes funds remaining from the previous fiscal year, receipts in excess of estimates and unexpended budget line items.

By using the $230,000 to offset the budget deficent means that money is not available for unexpected capital costs or to help pay interest payments on the town's long-term debt, as it's intended, Selectman Merle Brown said.

Because town costs increase at a rate between 3 and 4 percent a year, the town strains to keep spending within the tax levy increase limit established by Proposition 2-1/2. The town is looking at having yearly overrides of approximately $100,000 and building up the free cash and overlay surplus accounts. Otherwise the town would continuinue to use the free cash and overlay surplus accounts to off-set revenue shortfalls and get hit with one big override vote every three or four

Fourth-graders get F on MCAS

Not enough improvement, state says

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The state Department of Education has given the Deer Hill School a failing grade when it comes to the Massachusetts Comprehensive Academic Standards test, saying though its scores have improved, they haven't improved enough.

"The state has certain standards for improvement, and they felt improvement should be based on the average of the 1999 and 2000 scores," explained Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan. "Though the Deer Hill did achieve well, we did not improve as much as the state would have liked us to."

Performance and improvement ratings are arrived at by averaging the test scores from 1999 and 2000 and comparing them to a 1998 baseline test score. Based on the 1998 MCAS test scores, schools were placed in one of six baseline categories for performance: very high, high, moderate, low, very low or critically low. Each category had a point range for expected improvement. Using the average of the 1999 and 2000 scores, each school was rated as to whether they met their individual goal..

"Let's suppose a child takes a test and gets a 70, and you tell them to get an 80, and they do. But if they get a 90, and you tell them to get a 95, they might not be able to raise it."
— Principal Paul Callahan

According to the state, the Deer Hill's scores have remained the same over the past three years,

It's a tough winter to pepper roads with salt

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Snowy weather is usually not a problem for the Cohasset Department of Public Works.

The DPW — with Harold Litchfield, 66, at the helm — has seen many a storm like the one that hit town over the weekend.

But a lack of enough salt is a problem.

"We can plow and scrape," Litchfield said. "But the problem is we can't get enough salt."

In a typical winter, the DPW will go through upwards of 300 tons of salt and the town's storage facility isn't large enough to hold all that at once. The DPW used the 31 tons it received a week ago, got another delivery Tuesday of 34 tons and still needs more.

"I don't know when the rest will come," Litchfield said. The town buys salt through a cooperative organized by Norfolk County.

He explained that although the weekend's storm was the first "plowable" snow of the winter, the DPW has been out many times with sand and salt.

Joe McNamee of Eastern Minerals in Chelsea, an area salt supplier — that has helped Cohasset out in a pinch this year — said demand for salt is up this season. There are two types of salt used for streets: rock salt that is mined and solar salt that comes from evaporating sea water in the desert, McNamee said.

"We can plow and scrape. But the problem is we can't get enough salt."
— DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield

"It's been one of those winters," McNamee said about road conditions that require salt. He explained that the demand coupled with state environmental regulations about hours of operation and storage have made things "a little tight right now."

Rudy Marinosci of Morton Salt in Providence, R.I., that won the salt bid from the cooperative the town belongs to, said Cohasset's problem

Residents scratch way to $4 million

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The town's newest millionaires don't live on Atlantic Avenue or drive a new Mercedes. In fact, until last Tuesday, they weren't even sure if they could keep their house, let alone buy a new car.

But now Sohier Street residents Richard and Donna Herbert can do both. The Massachusetts State Lottery announced Friday that the Herberts won $4 million on a single scratch ticket, and will collect $134,000 over the next 20 years, after taxes.

Richard, 60, and Donna, 56, had spent part of Tuesday morning sending out résumés for Donna, who, according to Lottery spokesman Shannon Cadres, had been laid off in December from Bradlees, when the retail chain announced it was going out of business. The couple stopped in the Scituate Marketplace and purchased a $10 "$400,000,000 Spectacular" scratch ticket. Donna later scratched the ticket and told her husband they had to go to the Lottery's offices in Braintree.

"Now we can keep the house," Richard, a part-time deli clerk at Stop & Shop, told Lottery officials.

The Herberts were not available for comment. Cadres said she believed they left on a vacation immediately.

But Donna told Lottery officials her job search was over, and Richard said he planned to quit his job.

Bill Lahti, the manager of Scituate Marketplace, said the Herberts

Preserving land

Though selectmen have already voted to not place the Community Preservation Act on the annual Town Meeting warrant, and instead ask the town to vote on the Norfolk County version of an open space funding plan, board Chairman Thomas Callahan wants to revisit the issue.

The Community Preservation Act was set up by the Legislature last year to help towns purchase open space, preserve historical resources, and enhance recreational areas. Towns can vote for an override of between zero and 3 percent to be put in an open space trust fund. The state will then match the funds through money raised by real estate recording fees at county register offices.

But the Norfolk County Board of Advisors is asking towns to file, as a home-rule petition, a bill that would allow towns to raise money for open space preservation by diverting county money raised by real estate excise tax fees back to the towns. This money would not be eligible for state matching funds. Through the CPA, Cohasset could raise as much as $486,000 a year — $972,000 when matched by the state — for open space preservation. However, Town Manager Mark Haddad said resident tax bills would rise an average of $240 a year, a notion not many residents would be fond of. The Norfolk County plan would raise a modest $145,000, but without increasing taxes.

However, Callahan said after attending a recent meeting with the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, he found some exemptions contained in the CPA that the town should consider before making a decision. Callahan said the first $100,000 of property value can be exempt from the override, meaning a house worth $300,000, would only be taxed on $200,000. Also, there is an exemption for senior citizens, and commercial property.

But both Haddad and Selectman Michael Sullivan still expressed concern over the state plan. Haddad said with a $300,000 override planned for this year, plus debt exclusion increase for the recent sewer project and upcoming school construction project, voters would be very reluctant to tack on an additional voluntary tax.

Sullivan raised doubts that the state would even have the money to match all the towns. The state expects to raise between $25 million and $37 million a year through the recording fees. But Sullivan queried, if every town votes in the CPA at 3 percent, the amount the state would be on the hook for more than $25 million.

"What happens if there is $50 million in requests?" he asked.

The board expects to discuss the issue further at a later meeting.

Salt shortage this winter is a lack of storage space.

"There are only so many vehicles that can be run out of one location," he said, suggesting the town build a bigger storage facility and stock up with enough salt in the summer.

Litchfield said that's just not fiscally or physically practical. Salt tightens up and gets hard over the summer and Litchfield does his best to keep a handle on the snow budget.

"I don't like to have more on hand than I have to," he said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said other towns are experiencing difficulties in obtaining salt this season.

"I was at a meeting of South Shore town managers and every other town was having problems getting salt," he said.

The DPW takes care of the town's 37 miles of accepted roads and 12 miles of private ways that have two or more homes. The Massachusetts Highway Department handles the 3.2 miles of Rte. 3A in town.

Litchfield said during the weekend storm that dumped upwards of 8 inches of snow in Cohasset, the town's seven trucks were called into action as well as seven more from private contractors.

The snow and ice budget is $50,000. Litchfield doesn't have the final figures but thinks most of that has been depleted. State law allows municipalities to deficit spend snow budgets. The town can make up the deficit the following year, Haddad said. The town had a $22,000 snow and ice deficit last year, he said.

"come in now and then, whenever they're down in the area." He said he was working the day they bought the ticket, but nobody found out until later they had won.

"It's unbelievable to have a $4 million ticket in your store," Lahti said. "The odds on that are tremendous."

Lahti said store employees were lamenting they didn't buy the ticket themselves. "To think the ticket could have actually gone through your hands," he said.

Scituate Marketplace will receive a 1 percent commission or $40,000 for selling the winning ticket.

As for the Herberts, Lahti said, "I hope they come back and spend some more."

The Lottery said the "$400,000,000 Spectacular" game, offers players an 80 percent chance of winning something. Out of the 20 $1 million and 10 $4 million tickets available, 12 $1 million and five $4 million prizes have been claimed. The Lottery says the odds of winning $4 million is 1 in 5,040,000.

Schools officials reinstate Osgood technology position

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset School Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey said the school department has done such a good job controlling special education costs, that the system could bring back the Osgood School technology aide position for the remainder of the year.

"I feel comfortable at this time [with costs] that we can at this time reinstate the position," Malvey told the school committee last Thursday night.

The school voted to reinstate the position, but it was not unanimous. Committee member Stephanie Noble questioned how necessary technology education at the lower grade levels actually is.

The position will give technology instruction and trouble-shoot the school's equipment. Currently, Lisa Kalapinski had been handling technology instruction for both the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools. Malvey said reinstatement of the position will cost the district $10,000. He doesn't expect any trouble filling the position, saying, "Once we put the Cohasset name out there, it's going to get some attention."

The position was eliminated last spring, and had been a source of contention between the school committee and members of the Osgood School PSO. Members have twice this year made public please for the committee to reconsider the position cut, however, board chairman Pat Martin has refused to revisit the issue.

But Noble told the committee and those in attendance, "After all the readings and discussions, I still cannot come out on the opposite side of the issue."

Noble said she was aware of the amount of people both on the board and in the community that is in favor of technology instruction at the lower grades, but she questions the need for it.

"I just don't see the urgent need for kindergartners, first and second graders to have technology," said Noble. "The question of all questions we really have to take a long, hard look at, is should kindergartners be getting the exact same amount of technology as sixth graders?"

The committee said an informative meeting with school department technology head Ken Ciseneros will be held at a later meeting.

Selectmen expand Kimball's license

Outdoor functions now allowed at harbor hotel

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen expanded Kimballs By the Sea's liquor license to allow outdoor functions; a move perhaps a bit late, as the harbor-side hotel has held seven outdoor parties over the past five years.

The issue was brought to the board's attention in December, when selectmen, acting as the town's licensing authority, held an open forum to discuss changes to the liquor license conditions. A number of residents complained of noise coming from tent parties at Kimballs, which came as a surprise to the board because outdoor functions weren't part of the hotel's license conditions.

Kimballs representatives Joe Campbell and Jane McCombs were called in for a hearing Tuesday night, and said the majority of the hotel's 30 wedding parties a year are kept in doors, but occasionally they spill out into the parking lot or patio area.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Cohasset police received 10 noise complaints from Kimballs last year, but only one was regarding an outside function. Five of the calls were from hotel guests complaining about other guests.

But the board was concerned about noise coming from the hotel, especially due to it location. "The problem is, at night when sound travels across water," Selectman Merle Brown said.

The board voted to extend Kimballs liquor license to outdoor functions, as long as they are kept within the patio area, and follow the new regulations that prohibit noise from being heard at the neighbor's property line after 10 p.m. Selectmen said the Red Lion Inn, when completed, will also be allowed to have outdoor functions until 10 p.m. Functions are allowed to continue at both places until a later hour inside.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan warned Campbell and McCombs that the board will review the conditions at a later date, if problems arise.

The board also scolded Kimballs for not getting a building permit when tents have been erected in the past.

"You need a permit [from Building Inspector Robert Egan] to construct a tent," Haddad said.

Race for library trustee forms

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Pleasant Street resident George Haley may join the fight for a seat on the Paul Pratt Library Board of Trustees, along with incumbents Sarah Pease, Barbara Power and June Hubbard. The looming library battle, joins the school committee as the only elected boards with potential races this election season.

Last week Osgood PSO member Adrienne MacCarthy took papers out to fill one of the two seats up for grabs on the committee. Incumbents Mark DeGiacomo and committee Chairman Pat Martin have also taken papers out. Martin and DeGiacomo are the first incumbents to seek reelection to the school committee since at least 1997.

Also taking papers out this week for the April 7 Town Election are current Water Commissioner Rob Kasameyer, and Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo.

Other candidates that have already taken papers out include Board of Assessors member Elsa Miller; Richard Brown of Church Street, for the vacant Planning Board seat; and Stanton Road resident Sean Cunning, for sewer commissioner, Selectman Chairman Thomas Callahan and fellow Selectman Merle Brown.

Current planning board member Terry Atherton, sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury, and Recreation Commission member Thomas Wigmore have already announced they will not be seeking another term.

Two water commissioners spots will be up for election, though one will be for a one-year term to replace former commissioner Chip Muncey. Muncey resigned Jan.1, and was temporarily replaced by Glenn Pratt, until someone can be elected to fill the year left of his term. Pratt is expected to run.

Nomination papers for the annual town election are now available at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions are up for grabs:

Selectmen - two for three years

School Committee - two for three years

Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three for three years

Assessor - one for three years

Board of Health - one for three years

Cohasset Housing Authority - one for five years

Planning Board - one for five years

Recreation Commission - one for five years

Sewer Commission - one for three years

Water Commission - one for three years, one for one year to fill an unexpired term

Nomination papers must be submitted to the Board of Registrars by Feb. 15. Town elections will be held on Saturday, April 7.

Town adopts strict body art rules

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset freshmen basketball squad won't be able to get a team tattoo under "tattoo and body art parlors regulations" adopted Tuesday night by the Board of Health.

This week the state Department of Public Health released its set of regulations including a ban of tattoos for people under the age of 18 and a requirement that a parent be present for a minor to get a body piercing. Genital piercings would be banned for all ages. The Cohasset Board of Health adopted the state's guidelines but also added some additional regulations, as the state allows. Cohasset will require tattoo and body art parlor operators to administer tattoos with disposable needles, and establish other various shop space and size requirements, said board chairman Stephen Bobo. Also, there will be a $100 licensing fee, and artists must be licensed in another state to open shop in Cohasset.

Last October, the Massachusetts Supreme Court ruled the state's 38-year ban of tattoo parlors and body art shops was a violation of free speech laws. As of Jan. 30, body artists will be able to file for licenses to open shop in the commonwealth's cities and towns, and as a result, the state and its municipalities have been scurrying to adopt a set of health and safety regulations for a craft no longer regulated to back-alleys, or amateur tattoo kits.

But the new regulations aren't restricted to simple tattoos, gotten in the midst of a night out drinking with the guys or the girls. Body art now includes such things as branding, – yes, branding as in applying a hot metal design to the skin to form a scar – braiding, —where a patch of skin is removed and reattached to form a design— and other types of scarification. Braiding will be prohibited in Cohasset, but Bobo said that's the only body art that will be. The Board of Health is in the process of creating a summary sheet for the 12 pages of regulations it adopted, and is expected to have it ready for release by next week.

Board of Health member Peggy Chapman, a registered nurse, said the biggest issues the town was concerned with was regarding sanitary requirements and the qualifications of the person.

Bobo said the town was trying to be regulatory, without being restrictive. "We don't want to not allow anybody to put a business in town, but we don't want the town to become home to tattoo parlors," he explained. He said the town has had discussions with officials in other towns where tattooing is legal, and also to people who have received tattoos, and said there is some health risk involved with the practice of body art. "It's not something to be taken lightly," Bobo said.

Town health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said blood-transmuted diseases such as Hepatitis B and C, Pamalona Virus, and possibly HIV, could all be contracted from dirty needles. Also, Godzik was concerned about complications arising from skin-altering procedures, such as recipients developing pockets of scars known as keloid formations.

The state Legislature is expected to review the regulations, and even possibly pass a formal law authorizing tattoo and body art parlors.

Rep. Bradley finds Beacon Hill a nice fit

Crime bills a focus for legislature

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Fridays are normally "dress-down" days at the Massachusetts State House. That's the one day of the week legislative aides, secretaries, assistants and even some legislators can leave the ties and heels at home, and dress more comfortably.

So new state Rep. Garrett Bradley stands out a bit on Fridays. While his legislative assistant Michael Salerno chose to wear khakis and a collared shirt last week, Bradley was in a full business suit – well, with one exception.

"Dress-down day means I don't wear a vest," said Bradley half-jokingly. It should come as no surprise to anyone that knows Bradley that he dons a suit even when he doesn't have to. It was Bradley who was seen walking around Hingham and Hull in mid-summer in a business suit.

"You never know who you're going to run into in the halls," he reasoned.

But maybe it's just a way for Bradley to stand out. Following in the footsteps of legislative legend Mary Jeanette Murray, Bradley is looking to step out from under her shadow.

Bradley has said on many occasions that he knows in order to have as much success as Murray had, he must be a representative of the people — to redefine, as she did, what constituent service means.

He also wants to be known for his work on the issues. Bradley won't be sitting on the sideline even though the filing deadline for new legislation had passed before he was sworn-in Jan. 2.

He has signed onto a number of initiatives and will be the lead sponsor of some House versions of Senate bills. He has also re-filed several bills left over from Murray, who was notorious for the number of bills she filed.

So far, Bradley has filed bills for land-swaps and sea walls; hospital funding and safer cigarettes.

However, Bradley took a lesson he learned in his orientation meetings about focusing on issues he is interested and has some expertise in. As a result, Bradley has drawn on his years in the Plymouth County District Attorney's office, and will back a number of bills designed to toughen sentencing guidelines and close legal loopholes.

He has signed onto a number of bills filed by Senate Judiciary Committee member Cheryl Jacques, D-Needham, including a bill that would allow victims of all crimes to testify at convicted criminals' parole hearings. Right now, under Massachusetts law, only families of murder victims can testify. But with convicted serial child molester William Porter, a former priest, up for parole — the new law would allow his victims to testify against him at his parole hearing. Other bills include: one that would include oral sex between family members as part of the legal definition of incest; expand the time-frame someone has to file sexual harassment charges from six months to 300 days; provide additional protection to victims of rape and domestic violence; prevent criminals from profiting from their notoriety; and expand protection against threats to those made over the internet.

He also signed onto a Jacques' bill that would require cigarette manufacturers to make cigarettes that extinguish themselves.

Land swaps

Bradley has also been working well with five-term state Sen. Robert Hedlund, and has co-signed, or signed onto a few bills with him. Among the bills are land-swap bills affecting the Hingham Shipyard redevelopment plan and the new development off Ward Street.

"Hingham officials told me they really need these to go forward," Bradley said.

One bill affecting Cohasset that Bradley has signed onto, would reinstate the moratorium on landfills in the state. Some Cohasset residents are afraid that with moratorium currently lifted, the Cohasset Heights Landfill would file to reopen.

Also, Bradley backs a bill that would take control of Title 5 regulations from local boards of health, and establish a state-wide, uniform enforcement code. Title 5 is the state code governing septic systems, and hits residents in Hingham and Cohasset, where the soil is frequently just inches deep above solid granite ledge, particularly hard. Bradley said many residents are upset that regulations in Hingham are tougher than the regulations found in Title 5. The bill would require any board of health regulations that go beyond what is found in Title 5 to be approved through a Town Meeting vote. Another bill, one of several filed by legislators, would reestablish the zero percent interest revolving fund for sewer and water projects. A line in the 2001 state budget ended the zero percent program, and the new bill would delete that section.

Tobacco money

One bill that could get Bradley some attention would authorize the state to spend up to 20 percent of the tobacco settlement fund for state aid for towns struggling under a heavy property tax burden. However, the twist is, towns with a smaller amount of industrial and commercial tax base, like Cohasset, would be eligible, as opposed to cities with large industrial and commercial property tax bases, such as Quincy. As part of the 1998 civil action suit against the tobacco industry, Massachusetts is slated to receive $383 million over the next 20 years. Bradley said 30 percent of the money is ear-marked for anti-smoking advertising, "which is great," he said. But he would like to see 50 percent remain in a trust fund, and give 20 percent back to the towns that are struggling.

Another locally-initiated piece of legislation would give towns the ability to transfer up to 1 percent of the their operating budget, between departments, or accounts. The bill, requested by Cohasset Town Manager Mark Hadadd, would give towns this ability only in the months of May and June, with the authority of the town finance committee, and it would not apply to school-related money. Right now, a town must receive authorization from a town meeting vote, before it can shift

Takes oath in his hometown

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

New state Rep. Garrett Bradley brought his campaign for the Third Plymouth District seat full circle Monday night when he took the oath office in front of family and friends at Tosca in Hingham.

"It feels like an odyssey," said Bradley — who started campaigning for the State House three years ago — but is now finishing up his third-full week on Beacon Hill. Though he was officially sworn in Jan. 2 in the State House Chamber, he once again took the oath, this time administered by family friend, state Auditor Joe DiNucci, and before his wife, Heather, parents, gubernatorial hopeful Warren Tolman, and other party supporters.

"This is what it's all about, you and the community," Bradley told the crowd of 100. "Everyday I walk into the State House I'm in awe, and I thank you for the opportunity."

Bradley, who was defeated by incumbent Republican Mary Jeanette Murray in 1998, easily defeated Republican Maryanne McKenna and independent candidate Walter Murray in November's election. He promised to "work hard, be honest, and be accessible" to his constituents. "I won't let you down," he said.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley takes the oath administered by state Auditor Joseph DiNucci at a special ceremony at Tosca in Hingham on Monday.

The crowd was a blend of the older guard that helped to elect Caroline Stouffer, the last Democrat to represent Hingham before redistricting gave the town to Mary Jeanette Murray in 1976, and of young professionals. Tosca, owned by Ed Kane who made an appearance, seemed to be the perfect location for the event, as revelers munched on appetizers, sipped wine, and waited for some words from their conquering hero as scents from the wood-fueled stove filled the cavernous, brick restaurant.

Tolman, who emceed the event, has known Bradley since 1994, money around.

Bradley is also pushing for an increase in benefits to families of call firefighters killed on duty. Right now, the amount of money given to families are at 1963 levels — $520 per child, per year. The new bill would bump up benefits to $12,000 a child. He said three call firefighters were killed in 1999, and it was only then realized the benefit amounts had never been updated.

Mandatory sentencing

Bradley also has a couple bills he is eyeing for a few years down the road. One would create mandatory sentences for people convicted in the rape of a child. "Right now, if you deal drugs near a school, you go to jail for a minimum two years," Bradley said. "But if you rape a child near a school, there's no minimum sentence, and may not spend any time at all." He mentioned the recent uproar over the Judge Maria Lopez case, where Lopez gave a man convicted of sexually assaulting a 14-year old boy no jail time.

But for the next few months, Bradley said he's going to start to get his bearings together about the state budget. He has already attended one preliminary budget discussion — a budget shortfall is a possibility, some leaders report, and said he wasn't afraid to speak up and ask questions.

Though Bradley believes the state is going to have to exercise some fiscal restraint, with the voter-approved tax rollback taking effect this year.

The first month has been a period of adjustment for Bradley, who is one of the youngest state representatives at 30. He described himself as "humbled" every time he walks into the House chamber. But he knows it will soon be time to get down to business. He expects Governor Paul Cellucci to release his budget within the next couple of months, and when that happens "I'm going to roll up the sleeves and get to work."

when Bradley worked on Tolman's Senate campaign. He praised Bradley for his courage, integrity, intelligence and perseverance. "That's what people should look for in an elected official," said Tolman, who ran for lieutenant governor alongside gubernatorial candidate Scott Harshbarger in his 1998 battle to unseat Gov. Paul Cellucci.

Tolman also introduced DiNucci, a former middleweight professional boxer. "Now I'm a heavyweight," DiNucci joked. DiNucci served alongside Bradley's great-uncle, Joe Bradley, D-Newton, in the Legislature in the 70's, before DiNucci became auditor in 1987. Bradley also played football at Boston College with DiNucci's son, Joe.

DiNucci, who spoke at Bradley's kickoff in 1998 at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall not far away on Rte. 3A, called Bradley "hardworking, dedicated and courageous."

"Listen to the words when he takes the oath," DiNucci told the crowd, "he means it."

Also in attendance were Plymouth County Sheriff Joe McDonough, state Rep. Bob Nyman, D-Hanover, Hull Selectman Tim MacKenzie, and former state representative Caroline Stouffer. Former state senatorial candidates Jim Cantwell and Ted LeClair were there to cheer Bradley on, as was Bradley's Democratic primary opponent Michael Holden, and Tim White, who ran for Plymouth County Commissioner.

Bradley also thanked his campaign manager, now legislative assistant Michael Salerno. "The reason I hired him was that when I yell at him he doesn't cry," Bradley joked.

Bradley said he was going to take some of the good feeling from the evening back to Beacon Hill Wednesday, when the House sat in its first formal session of the year. "When I look at all the people that supported me," he said afterwards, "that's why I ran for state rep."

Contract renewed with American Water

The Water Commission has voted unanimously to renew its existing three-year contract with American Water Systems (formerly American Anglian) for an additional three-year term for the operation and maintenance of the Cohasset Water Department.

"We are very pleased with the performance of American Water Systems and feel that the customers of the Cohasset Water Department are well served by this contract," said John McNabb, chairman of the Board of Water Commissioners.

The Water Commission conducted a comprehensive performance evaluation of American Water's performance since the contract was signed in 1998 and concluded that American Water has:

- Met or exceeded contract requirements for the distribution system, water treatment plant and for customer service.
- Saved the Water Department $90,000 in the past year for the purchase of water mains, gates, and hydrants through American Water's bulk purchase program.
- Kept unaccounted for water to 8 percent or less (about one-half the industry standard of 15 percent).
- Paid for $96,925 in maintenance expenses, more than double the contractual requirement of $45,000. They also repaired the sludge collection system in house when the system had a catastrophic failure in September, 2000, saving the department at least $5,000.
- Conducted required operation and maintenance tasks as needed in the past 21/2 years, including repairing 115 water leaks, painting 119 fire hydrants, and exercising 95 hydrant valves and 162 street gates.

"We also conducted an investigation of the market for the provision of contract operations of water departments," McNabb said, "to determine if we would be likely to save money by going out to bid again instead of renewing the contract. The investigation, conducted for us by Norfolk Environmental, concluded that the cost of the American Water contract was competitive and that renewal was more advantageous for the town than going out to bid again."

"Cohasset has received national recognition for this public-private partnership," said McNabb. "The EPA uses the Cohasset Water Department arrangement with American Water as a case history in seminars they give on how to run small water systems."

Final approval for renewal of the contract is still needed from Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Water system improvements detailed

The Cohasset Water Commission released its Year 2001 water system improvements this week.

We are moving forward this year to continue to make improvements to the Cohasset water system, to improve fire protection and the quality of drinking water provided to our customers in Cohasset," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission.

"Once we fill the new Scituate Hill tank later this month" McNabb said, "we will then flush the entire distribution system, which will improve the taste and odor of the drinking water. We also will drain, clean, inspect, repair (if necessary) and paint the Bear Hill tank. When both tanks on line, we will be able to provide greater fire reserve to the town which will improve fire protection."

Other improvements, said McNabb, include:

- Replacing 20 fire hydrants and 10 gates and valves, improving fire protection.
- Reactivation of the Ellms Meadow Wellfield, to provide a back-up water supply.
- Repair of settling basins and flocculators in the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, to ensure the continued operation of the Plant.
- Clean and line Beechwood Street (Rt 3A-Riverview Drive), Elm Street, and Summer Street.
- Replace 900 feet of 6 inch pipe on Border St. with 10 inch pipe.
- Improve fire flows on Rustic Dr. by either (a) looping Linen Dr., with Forest Ave., or (b) replacing 6 inch pipe on Rustic Dr. with 8 inch pipe.

The Board of Water Commissioners greatly appreciates the assistance and cooperation of the board of Selectmen, Town Manager, and all other town officials, boards, and employees," McNabb said.

State to hold water rate hearing in Hull

The State Department of Telecommunications and Energy (DTE) will hold a hearing at Hull High School at 7 p.m. on Monday Jan. 29, to receive resident input on the petition of Massachusetts American Water Company to raise its rates charged for the water it provides to resident and businesses in Hull, Hingham, and part of Cohasset and Norwell.

The DTE held a similar hearing in Hingham on Jan. 16.

The hearing in Hull is being held after the Town contacted DTE and requested a hearing also be held in Hull.

"Users of the water company monopoly in Hull are greatly affected by the rising water rates and the DTE should hear directly from townspeople as to their objections to yet another rate increase. The Board urges all Town residents and businesses to attend this important hearing and make their voices heard by the state regulators." said John D. Reilly, Jr. chairman of the Hull Board of Selectmen.

The Water Company is a private utility owned by a national conglomerate, However, because it has a monopoly over the distribution of water, it is regulated by the DTE.

In 1996 the DTE granted permission on to the Water Company to raise rates for area users by some 160 percent in part due to the need for a new water treatment plant to be constructed. Hull and Hingham opposed this request at hearings and appealed the decision to the state Supreme Judicial Court. The SJC in a decision released on the day that DTE held its hearing in Hingham on the latest rate increase request, upheld the DTE 1996 decision.

Through an innovative legislative relief package moved through the legislature by State Sen. Robert Hedlund and then state Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray, some relief was provided to ratepayers via a special bill which provided financing assistance for the construction of the water plant. The new plant was required by the state and was necessary to comply with the federal Clean Water Act.

The hearing gets underway Jan. 29, at 7 p.m. at the Doniger Auditorium at Hull High School

School bidding process underway

After nearly a month of delays, the bidding process for the Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle/High School renovation and expansion projects is about to get underway.

School Building Committee chairman Rob Spofford said the middle/high school's bid specifications have been held up in order to fine tune the electrical drawings. The project is slated to be put out to bid Monday, Jan. 29, with bids opened March 6. The Deer Hill project, will be put out for bid March 5, and opened March 15. Spofford said the committee believes the town will benefit in separating the bids, but would not expound why.

He also added that he believes the project will benefit from the delayed bids. "We feel good about this," he said, "We think it's worthwhile spending the extra time to make sure the document has been adequately and 100 percent completed."

Also, the school construction project has received the blessing of the town Conservation Commission. The middle/high school facet will see a new drainage system put in place. Plans had originally called for a discharge pipe be located within 50-feet of the wetlands but a second set of plans were submitted with the pipe moved back.

GLITCHES RESOLVED

Hello Cohasset! Well, we are back in action and from the wonderful responses from many of you, it is none to soon! I am very sorry for the missing columns last week, I think all of the glitches are resolved. It is wonderful for me to know how many people really read this column, I enjoy the comments and feedback, both positive and negative. Make sure to keep all the news coming as well as the great feedback.

SNOWSTORM

What did you all think of the beautiful snowstorm that we had? Make sure to try and get out in the snow, take a walk in it, play in it or throw a few snowballs. It really has a way of making you stop and think of how pretty and amazing our weather really can be.

NEW ARRIVAL

We have a new little lady among us here in town. John and Katie (Lord) Naples of Parker Avenue in Cohasset, announce the birth of their daughter, Samantha Elizabeth Naples. Samantha was born on Jan. 2, 2001 weighing in at 9 lbs., 5 oz and measuring 21-ins. long. Samantha's grandparents are David and Irene Lord of Cohasset and Robert and Frances Naples of Naples, Fla. Congratulations to all of you and love, hug and snuggle that new little girl.

BUYING PINK

If you see John and Rita Durkin around town buying pink be sure to congratulate them. The Durkins, who recently moved across the border to Scituate, are new grandparents to Caleigh Sue Durkin. Caleigh, the daughter of Cohasset native Thomas Joseph Durkin and his wife Suellen, arrived Jan. 11 and tipped the scales at a petite 6 lbs., 14 oz. She measured just 19 ins. long. Caleigh's maternal grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph MacDonald of Weymouth. Caleigh and her mom and dad, and siblings Micaela, 5, Thomas, 2, and Daniel, 1, make their home in Marshfield.

CHS REUNION

The CHS Class of 1995 had its fifth-year reunion on Dec. 22 at Atlantica. It was great to see so many classmates there! Thanks to Cohasset Greenery and Atlantica for sponsoring this wonderful event.

QUILT SHOW

The Second Congregational Church on Cohasset Common will be sponsoring its eighth-annual quilt show and luncheon on Saturday, March 3, from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. The $10 donation includes a gourmet lunch and viewing of the more than 50 amazing quilts. Advanced purchases of tickets is recommended as seating is limited. Call the church office at 781-383-0345 to make reservations. If you have a quilt you would like displayed, call Carol Sandblom at 781-383-1812. This is a wonderful event and a great way to help raise money for pediatric AIDS.

BC HIGH HONORS

Boston College High School released the names of some Cohasset students who have been named to the first quarter honor roll. David F. Crowley-Buck '03, and John R. Crowley-Buck '01 both made high honors. Christopher J. Carr '02, Evan M. McCaffrey '01, Matthew R. Meikleham '03 and Joseph D. Roach '03 made Honors. Great work, gentlemen!

NOBLES HONOR ROLL

Noble and Greenough School also announced its honor roll students for the first semester. Kayvon Tehranian, a freshman received Highest Distinction, Joseph M. Palone, a senior received High Distinction and John Edward Lubitz received Distinction. These are great accomplishments for all three of you, keep up the great work.

RUN FOR SCHOOL COUNCIL

The nominating committee of the Cohasset PSO is seeking candidates to run for parent representatives for both the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools for the coming two-year term.(2001-2003.) Each School Council is comprised of the principal, teachers, parent representatives and community representatives. They are charged with formulating and updating the schools improvement plan, missions and goals, as well as establishing focus areas to be studied each year. Parent representatives are elected for a two-year term by the parent body of each school and must have student(s) in attendance at the school they are serving for the duration of their term. There are two open seats at Osgood and one seat open at the Deer Hill School for the coming term. Individuals interested in serving as a parent representative are asked to submit a brief statement about themselves and their interest in the School Council to the PSO Nominating Committee, c/o Susan Jaffe, PO Box 30, no later than Monday, Feb. 12. Balloting will take place March 2-9. Council members will be announced at the PSO Board Meeting, March 20 and introduced at the PSO Annual Meeting in May.

VALENTINE SOIREE

What is happening on your calendar on Saturday, Feb. 10? How about coming and enjoying a night of fun, music and dancing at the St. Valentines Soiree, being held at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham from 7-11 p.m.? This event is being sponsored by the Cohasset PSO and the cost is $40 per person, $75 per couple. Also being featured are the ever-popular Chinese baskets and tickets for this raffle will be available soon. For more information or to buy tickets to this wonderful evening, contact any of the PSO members or call Janeen Culhane at 383-2349.

ART ENTRIES

The South Shore Art Center is currently seeking craft entries for its 46th Annual Festival on the Common, a juried art and fine craft fair held on Father's Day Weekend. Did you know that our very own Festival on the Common is the oldest outdoor art festival in the United States? This year's event will run Friday, June 15 through Sunday, June 17 and is one of the premier fundraisers for the South Shore Art Center. The festival attracts knowledgeable craft collectors and buyers, as well as families from throughout the Boston area. For more information or an application, please contact Diane Kennedy, festival coordinator, at 781-383-2787, ext. 19 or visit www.ssac.org. Vendor Fees are $225 for three days. Application deadline is March 12.

AWARDED CREDENTIALS

Congratulations to Kimberly Farwell of Cohasset, who is school psychologist for grades 5-8 in the Hull Public Schools, on meeting the standards for becoming a nationally certified school psychologist by the National Association of School Psychologists.

"Kimberly Farwell's dedication is highly commendable," said Caroline Wandle, chairman of the National School Psychology Certification Board. "Mastering the knowledge and skill levels required for certification enhances, I believe , the quality of service provided to our children and youth."

In the Hull Public Schools, Kimberly is responsible for a variety of tasks including facilitating individual and group counseling, completing comprehensive psychological evaluations to determine eligibility for special education and/or regular education services, facilitating Chapter 766 team evaluations and meetings, and providing crisis prevention, intervention and consultation with parents and teachers.

That is all for this week. Please keep the news coming and get it to me in the following ways: 781-923-1057 mail it to 622 CJC Highway, Cohasset email: jenpiep@yahoo.com or ATSchoolsin@aol.com Have a great week!

Scituate Harbor shop making move to Cohasset

Gatherings on the go

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

Just as the spotlight was beginning to shine on Marsha McNeice's Scituate Harbor business, she's taking it out of town.

Featured in the upcoming February issue of "Romantic Homes" magazine, McNeice's store, Gatherings, is leaving its Front Street location and moving north to Tedeschi Plaza off Route 3A in Cohasset.

"I really hate to leave the harbor," the Scituate resident said.. "It's really been great because I love (the area), but business is pretty slow down there."

But even though her business in the harbor isn't always booming, McNeice's shop still caught the attention of "Romantic Homes," a national magazine featuring home furnishings and decor, to showcase the shop where discarded furniture or antiques are brought to life again.

"I create furniture and marry pieces and we have some one-of-a-kinds and antiques," McNeice said. "We have old, we have new... We have anything you can decorate your home with."

On the two days Gatherings is closed — Monday and Tuesday — McNeice takes trips to other shops, wholesalers and auction houses to build up her own inventory. She'll even scour the internet looking for a discarded treasure.

"But most of it comes out of private homes and auctions and things like that."

Once it's in McNeice's hands, a transformation takes place, even if it's by a simple coat of paint.

"I've had people come in who had sold me a piece and not known it was the same piece because it changed so dramatically," she said.

McNeice got involved in Gatherings with two of her friends six years ago. Unemployed at the time and her children grown, McNeice just jumped into her own business at the urging of a friend. She now looks back and laughs at old pictures of the store in it's early years, when there was nothing but a painted chair here and there.

"Now you can't even walk around in the place, she said. "So we've really grown, and the new (Cohasset) store is going to be even more sophisticated than the one I have here."

McNeice believes it's her keen eye and sharp display sense that keeps her shop a favorite stop for her customers. "I have a good eye for things that are heavily carved and that I know will look terrific painted," she said.

"The difference with me is the way I display. I do vignettes, I just don't pile it all in. I bring in the chandelier and the bed and the chairs and the flowers and everything that goes with it."

Gatherings will be open until the end of February, where McNeice will take a few days to organize the new store and open its doors on March 1.

"I think I brought some clientele to the town," she said. "I don't think anyone leaves my store, whether they buy something or not, and doesn't say 'What a wonderful store.'"

Gatherings in Scituate Harbor will open March 1 at its new location in Tedeschi Plaza off Rte. 3A.

Plaza puzzle finally finished

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The addition of Gatherings to Tedeschi Plaza off Rte. 3A is the final piece of the puzzle for the Cohasset shopping center.

All the spaces are now leased, said John Whalen, director of properties for Rockland-based Tedeschi Realty.

Whalen said he is pleased with the mix of stores at the plaza that had been anchored by Woolworths for more than 30 years until the chain closed about three years ago.

"We are extremely pleased that Marsha McNeice has decided to relocate her store to our plaza," Whalen said about Gatherings, a home furnishings and decor business. "She adds a lot in terms of the product she offers and the class of clientele she'll be bringing into our center."

Tedeschi Realty subdivided the former 15,000-square foot Woolworths into four spaces that in addition to Gatherings, now include LaVita Tile, The Cohasset Consignment Shop, and ParTee, an indoor miniature golf facility.

"It's an eclectic mix that fills the bill with a variety of goods and services," Whalen said.

Other businesses at the plaza include long-time tenants: Nobles, CVS, Victoria's pizza, a bank, Cohasset Jewelers, an income tax service and Curtis Liquors.

McNeice said the new location will be better for her customer base that comes from several area towns.

"It's such a busy little plaza," she said. "In Scituate Harbor I was out of the loop.

"My customers would say, 'I had to run to CVS and then go pick up the kids,'" she said.

Whalen said the plaza has something for everyone.

"The plaza is a convenient place to get your film developed, buy a card or pick up a bottle of wine," Whalen said. He doesn't expect there to be openings at the plaza anytime soon.

"Most of the businesses are there for the long haul," Whalen said.

Gatherings opens March 1.

Extending a helping hand

The nor'easter on Sunday morning gave many Cohasset residents a chance to catch some extra sleep, enjoy a leisurely breakfast and to sit by a blazing hearth while swirling snowflakes coated their window sills. When the snowfall ended , nearly 10 inches of powder-like snow had painted the town with a picturesque coating.

Within minutes after the last flake had fallen, the echo of snow blowers and shovels blared a cacophony of notes in neighborhoods around the region as residents cleared their driveways. The hills around the area also came alive with the sound of sleds carrying youngsters and the young at heart downward.

Sunday's snowstorm generally offered most residents a pleasant change of pace. It came on a traditionally slow day. Although the storm was a largely welcome inconvenience it did pose hardships for some area seniors and disabled residents. For them, snowfall poses an extraordinary challenge for their ability to get around. Many of them are existing on fixed incomes and do not have money to pay people to remove snow from their driveway or walkway. All too often, they can be sometimes seen straining to clear a footpath on a walkway or driveway.

These challenges can add to their woes. Many of these residents live alone. The winter months can be an especially lonely time for them. The shorter daylight hours can make their struggles seem especially acute at this time of year. Some of these residents are shut ins and have medical conditions that don't allow them to get out freely. All too often, many of these residents don't have family close by to assist them with snow removal, getting groceries or prescription medicine. In some cases, these residents have nearby families who are too caught up with their own pursuits and don't care or notice their elder's plight.

Local homeowners can help ease the struggles faced by these residents by offering to remove snow from their driveway or walkway. Removing snow will also be helpful if an ambulance is needed to take an injured or ailing resident from their home. Neighbors can also help ease their plight by offering to run errands for them when a snow storm makes getting outdoors difficult. Thoughtful considerations such as these will also brighten their day and have their own rewards for the giver. Let's give community spirit a boost and ease these seasonal burdens faced by our neighbors.

Legislative seminar open to any citizen

The office of State Senator Robert L. Hedlund is now accepting applications for the Citizens Legislative Seminar. The program is designed to familiarize citizens with the legislature and the lawmaking process. Throughout the six-week program, seminar participants will listen to presentations from senators as well as state representatives on the lawmaking process.

"The Citizens Legislative Seminar is another wonderful way for constituents to become more familiarized with the legislative process," said Hedlund. "This is an exceptional program that provides citizens with a "nuts and bolts" style education given firsthand by the very individuals responsible for lawmaking in the Commonwealth."

The Citizens Legislative Seminar will meet from mid-March through mid-April, on Wednesdays from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Specific dates will be announced soon. The seminar is open to any interested citizen. Please contact Hedlund's State House office at (617) 722-1646 as soon as possible for information and applications.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Technology teacher

TO THE EDITOR:

On Oct. 25, 2000, as representatives of the parents of the students at the Deer Hill School, we began our request of the School Committee to revisit the budgetary cut of the Osgood technology position. This cut was affecting the 850 students at Osgood and Deer Hill. We had heard through conversations with the school principals, Ken Cisneros (technology coordinator), Ruth Fennessey (curriculum coordinator) and Ms. Lisa Kalapinski (technology teacher) that the shared teaching situation was not meeting the educational needs of our students.

We are pleased to hear that closure came to this budgetary dilemma at the Thursday, Jan. 18, 2001, School Committee meeting when the School Committee authorized the immediate hiring of a technology aide for the Osgood School. We were glad we had the opportunity to bring this situation to the forefront and advocate for our students and schools.

Thank you to the School Committee and the Town for realizing this need and committing to the reinstatement of technology at Osgood and fulfilling the educational needs of our students.

Token tunnel

TO THE EDITOR:

In an article (in the Jan. 11 Cohasset Mariner), "Train Study Group Back On Track", you stated that the Citizen's Advisory Committee (CAC) had recommended a tunnel under Hingham Square in order to minimize the train's impact on Hingham's historic district.

In fact, there were a number of tunnel recommendations from the CAC and various other agencies, none of which was as short as the 800 foot tunnel the MBTA finally offered. Had the MBTA complied with one of the longer tunnel recommendations, the Greenbush resistance in Hingham would have been largely silenced.

As things stand, the CAC is picking up where it left off three years ago, with only a token tunnel from the MBTA and with a more entrenched Hingham population (less the voices of three selectmen) as adamant as ever that Greenbush is simply too environmentally invasive to "become a reality."

Recycling money

Secretary Robert Durand
Executive Office of Environmental Affairs
100 Cambridge Street, Room 2000
Boston, MA 02200

Dear Secretary Durand:

Problems with solid waste disposal in this state are reaching crisis proportions. The state and its cities and towns are not meeting recycling goals, largely because citizens are still not fully participating in the effort, and because the state has a limited, and dwindling, landfill capacity. I join the towns in my district in asking you to consider using the $20 million being held in reserve in the Clean Environment Fund for a multimedia public education campaign to reach the state's recycling and waste reduction goals.

I understand the Cellucci Administration has announced that it will be accepting applications for new or expanded landfills in the state and pushing a "source reduction" agenda that calls for residents to downsize their trash output by 70 percent. These initiatives are admirable and important, but a 70 percent reduction will never become a reality unless the public finally catches on to the process, and cities and towns are reluctant to bind or expand existing facilities. An all-out campaign including messages repeated on prime-time television, radio and billboards is needed. A professional, statewide "Reduce, Reuse, Recycle, Buy Recycled" crusade would go along way toward changing the way our residents think about their disposal habits, and improving the effectiveness of the programs cities and towns are struggling to maintain.

Thank you for your consideration. If I can be of any further assistance as you consider this proposal, please feel free to contact me.

Buzzy's life

TO OUR COHASSET FRIENDS:

A message from the Stanton family — For everyone who enriched Buzzy's life by:

- Holding open a door or helping Buzzy with his coat.
- Visiting him when he was in the hospital.
- Performing skillful nursing and home care.
- Taking time to greet him on the street as he rode "down the hill" or driving him home from downtown in an old Fallon ambulance.
- Offering support, encouragement, and long-standing friendship to his parents.
- Enthusiastically escorting Buzz to sporting events, trips, races, casinos and "unnamed" destinations.
- Arriving at the red house on the corner to fix, mow, adjust, install, or paint something, or offering help, as cherished neighbors, craftspeople, and friends.
- Joining us at many family celebrations and events.
- Coming to his rescue as one of Cohasset's exceptional firefighters, EMTs or police officers, so many times.
- Expressing friendship in so many different, thoughtful and meaningful ways.

We offer our utmost gratitude for the circle of caring and the community of kindness that enveloped Buzz throughout his life.

Thank you to everyone in Cohasset who did so much to give his life meaning and spirit.

With sincere appreciation,

Making acquaintance with the natural world

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

If what the ecopsychologists say is true, that our emotional wellbeing is directly related to our connectedness with the natural world, then a question of significance becomes, How do people feel connected with the natural world? I've been conducting a little survey on this question, and here are my findings:

The most important way to be introduced to nature is by our parents. Evidently there's no substitute for growing up with people who love the outdoors. Our inborn affinity to the natural world would then continue to develop in a normal way. If you are in this category, you have a greater chance of a healthy life, evidently, than do those whose parents are unfamiliar with nature, or, even worse, are fearful of it. (Are you afraid of the dark? Are you afraid of the woods? Wait — there's an adage about a real woodsman being someone who will admit to having gotten lost.)

The second most important way to be introduced to nature is by a knowledgeable older friend or relative. One fellow I "interviewed" said that, in addition to having parents who loved nature, he was fortunate enough to have a woods mentor, a man who loved the outdoors and communicated this in a hands-on way. Those of us who are lucky can recall those persons inside or outside the family who taught us the names of trees, the names of edible plants, the names of the constellations.

A third important way to be introduced to nature is by reading. Not just adventurous survival stories or interesting/inspiring magazine articles, but also manuals of birds, plants, stars, so that we learn as we listen, walk, and observe.

Of course a ready-made organization that introduces youngsters to nature is Scouting. Contact Arthur Lehr or Merle Brown! There are also Audubon (i.e. Marshfield) and YMCA (i.e. Quincy) courses and camps. See you outside!

LIBRARY CORNER

Postcards available

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library are now selling postcards of the library cupola. Designed by Cohasset artist, Joanne Chittick, you can buy five postcards for $5 at the following places of business: The South Shore Art Center, Buttonwood Books & Toys, Cards 'n Shards, Flemings, Nobles and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Thanks to all of the above businesses for their participation. All proceeds go the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Grant on display

Three copies of the Massachusetts Public Library Construction Grant application are available for public viewing at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library front desk.

The trustees and the director of the library recently submitted the grant to the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners in Boston early last week.

Trustees are asking the state for more than $1,529,000 in funding for the conversion of the old Osgood School to the new Cohasset Public Library. Final grant awards by the MBLC are to be announced June 7. It is the trustees' hope for funding at this time and for construction to begin by September, 2001.

New artist on display

Virginia Allen, an artist and art historian, has her most recent paintings on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library beginning Jan. 10 and continuing until Feb. 28.

Allen, Professor Emeritus of art history at the Massachusetts College of Art in Boston, also served as chairperson of the Department of Critical Studies. She taught there for more than 25 years.

She has exhibited in New England and throughout the U.S. and has a number of her works in private and corporate collections. Allen has had recent solo exhibitions at Mass Art and the South Shore Art Center where she is a Gallery Artist (selected by jury).

Professor Allen received her bachelor's degree in zoology from Mount Holyoke College, her master's in art history from the University of Pittsburgh and her Ph.D. from Boston University. She studied printmaking and painting as an undergraduate, participating in programs at Oklahoma City University, the Ivy School of Professional Art in Pittsburgh and as a special student at Carnegie Mellon.

A Scituate resident since 1967, Allen's most recent artist statement sums up her relationship to her art. "Over time I have become increasingly entranced with the significance we give the objects that surround us in the daily round of our lives — the memories, emotions, meditations that they evoke in each of us and how these fluctuate with passing seasons and shifting weather. These have become the substance and focus of my life as an artist."

Rare bird alerts — how to get a birder's adrenaline flowing!

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Rare Bird Alerts! One day the Voice of Audubon's recorded message reveals that there are at least a dozen interesting birds at Plum Island in Newburyport. Oh why do Boston and the Big Dig have to lie in the path between here and there? Another day an e-mail brings word of a possible rarity off Provincetown. Are the plans for today so important that they can't be dropped in favor of a drive to the tip of Cape Cod? Next a friend calls with the whereabouts of a potential "life bird". Now that is a temptation which is really hard to resist! No matter how the report of the RBA arrives, birders will move to put birding at the top of the day's priority list.

In 1991 the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee (MARC) was created to establish a protocol for processing reports of unusual birds found in Massachusetts, to write a set of by-laws, and to produce an official list of birds that have been seen in Massachusetts. For a report to be accepted by MARC, at least 8 of the 9 members must agree that the description is accurate. Reports of birds considered to be of captive origin are not accepted. The latest official MARC list stands at 466 species for Massachusetts.

The next report from MARC will probably add at least one more bird to the list. Last November the arrival of a Tropical Kingbird at World's End in Hingham created a lot of excitement in the birding community. When first seen, it was recognized as something out of the ordinary, but a definitive identification could not be made before studying voice recordings. This is because a Couch's Kingbird looks almost identical, also belongs in the Rio Grande area, but has a different song. Many species of birds are so similar in looks that the only reliable way to make an accurate identification is by voice. Since this is the first time a Tropical Kingbird has been seen in Massachusetts, it will set a new official record, once it has been accepted by MARC.

Vagrants, or accidentals, are birds which occur at irregular intervals and outside of their normal range. A faulty internal navigational compass or very strong jet streams or storms are the usual causes of being so far off course. The danger for these misplaced birds is not so much the cold weather, as not being able to find enough to eat. This Tropical Kingbird stayed around for several weeks, eating berries and insects as it foraged in the fields of World's End, then disappeared in early December. It is unknown whether it died or flew elsewhere.

A Tropical King Bird perches on a branch at World's End back in November.

Some rare birds are more cooperative than others. In 1996 a Boreal Owl took up residence from November to April in a bush on Commonwealth Avenue between Gloucester and Fairfield Streets. It was able to survive, presumably, by feeding on rats and other rodents found in the area. To be able to see such a rare owl, more or less at eye level, over a period of several months in the middle of downtown Boston was pretty exciting. When a Boreal Owl showed up last fall just across the street from where the previous one had been, we all hoped it would stay around, too. Unfortunately, this one left after a couple of days.

1996 found another owl taking up residence in Rowley, Mass. for several months. The Great Gray Owl at 27 inches long is the largest owl found in North America, and appears in New England only very rarely. This bird was much photographed and written about, and people came from all around to see it. As the owl hunted in large fields across from a row of private homes on a quiet residential street, it illustrated several problems frequently associated with the presence of rare birds. Residents who have to put up with all the extra traffic and people hanging around at all hours of the day are not always as excited as birders over the arrival of unusual birds. Occasionally photographers, as in this case, become more interested in getting the perfect picture than in not harassing the bird.

Frustration sets in when a rare bird is unable to be relocated, despite the efforts of many birders. On Jan. 2, 2001, there was a report of three probable Yellow-legged Gulls on Nantucket. These birds ordinarily stay on the other side of the Atlantic, but occasionally are seen along the upper eastern seaboard. They are very difficult to distinguish from Herring or Lesser Black-backed Gulls. Several groups went to Nantucket to find the gulls again, but to no avail.

Last October two other rare birds appeared briefly in the Boston area. A Mountain Bluebird was seen at the wastewater treatment plant in Concord. The only previous record for Massachusetts was a bird captured on a ship 70 miles SSE of Nantucket in 1980. That bird did not survive, and the specimen now resides in Harvard's Museum of Comparative Zoology. A Black-throated Gray Warbler spent nearly a week at Mount Auburn Cemetery. There have been less than a dozen records of this bird in Massachusetts.

Anyone interested in making a trip to New Hampshire to see a Northern Hawk Owl or a Gyrfalcon should look for information on the web sites listed below. Both of these birds visit Massachusetts only irregularly, but current reports place them in the Jefferson/Whitefield, N.H. area.

If you see an unusual bird, it is important to take detailed notes on exactly what you see while still in the field, complete with sketches if possible. Photographs are even better. Report to 781-259-9506 x-7403 or x-7412. To find out what birds are in the area, rare or not so rare, you can call the Voice of Audubon at 781-259-8805 or look at recent reports of rare birds on the following web sites: www.massbird.org/ and http://www.virtualbirder.com/vbirder/realbirds/rbas/MA.html

Speed and connecting with nature

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

Back in October, I announced in the Mariner the formation of a Deep Ecology Study Circle. A group of 13 formed and we've been meeting weekly, using a reader from the Northwest Earth Institute. I'm learning a lot and enjoying the company of 12 wonderful people. One of the topics we discussed, ecopsychology, has lodged in my mind and won't go away.

Ecopsychology is a relatively recent development. Author Theodore Roszak (Voice Of The Earth) asserts most of us have lost our ancestral connection with animals and nature. As a result we fear nature and feel hostility toward it. But we repress these feelings and remain unaware of them. We may tell ourselves we love nature, but our actions tell a very different story. The result is not only our grave ecological crisis, but our nagging feeling of discontent. No matter how much we possess, or what sensations and feelings we experience, it's not enough. Deeply alienated from nature and from a vital part of our psyche, we are incapable of changing actions which cause environmental and psychic damage.

I began to wonder, "Am I disconnected from nature? How can I try to connect? What will it feel like? Where should I go to connect with nature?"

Members of the circle offered helpful suggestions from their own experience. Walking at World's End, I tried them out, and they seemed to work a little, but I felt some barrier I couldn't identify.

Later I remembered something Sam Keen said at a workshop my wife, Nan, and I did with him last summer at Omega Institute for Holistic Studies. Sam was editor of "Psychology Today" for many years, and is now a "misfit philosopher" and flying trapeze teacher. The workshop was called "Living The Questions." Sam said, "Our culture colonizes us with speed, like imperial nations used to colonize foreign lands." That statement too had been simmering in my mind for months. It wouldn't go away either.

Last weekend I was driving Clapp Road toward the expressway. Cars flashed by me going in the opposite direction, driving way too fast. The drivers were talking on cell phones. Revelation struck! Suddenly I felt and understood Sam's statement. Colonized with speed, as so many of us are, it feels so good when we drive fast. If you share this condition with me, imagine how wonderful it would feel to get on Route 3 and be able to drive as fast as your car can go. Floor it and push it up over 100. Wouldn't it be fantastic?

I need to rid myself of this speed colonization in order to slow down to nature's tempo, to connect with the deeper reality of Earth, to be capable of renewing my lost ancestral link with nature.

I realized I had been colonized with speed from my youth. I thought of the phrase, "Time is money," and realized some implications: If you're not accomplishing your job as fast as possible, then you're wasting money. Mustn't do that. If you can be doing more than one thing at once, then you're making more money faster. Good. So the faster you can drive, and the more things you can be doing fast at the same time, the better you're doing.

Nan, the love of my life, once gave me a little tin box (I collect little boxes). On the cover is a colorful reproduction of a fruit crate label, showing an eager dog running flat out, with wisps of air streaming behind, she's moving so fast. The bold red letters above read HURRY! I've always identified with this little dog, feeling the need to hurry when I work, to not spend more time than I should on a given task. Even when I knew some tasks didn't fit the timetable and needed indeterminate lengths of time for something good to evolve. It's always been a struggle.

But now I've realized this is not an innate part of who I am, but rather I've been colonized to feel this. I need to rid myself of this speed colonization in order to slow down to nature's tempo, to connect with the deeper reality of Earth, to be capable of renewing my lost ancestral link with nature. Sam had said, "Slowing down will be the next revolutionary act." I've got some slowing down to do.

David, another member of the circle, had trouble with this nature connection thing too. The first night we discussed it he told us how he had felt a wonderful connection with nature when hiking and camping up in the White Mountains. But walking in Wompatuck he admitted he just couldn't seem to get that feeling. He got the same suggestions I got. Then several sessions later he told us how he feels in Wompatuck when he sees trash, remnants of campfires, saplings and branches hacked down for firewood, and graffiti on the rock ledge. It became apparent to several of us he was expecting a nature connection to feel good, comforting, enjoyable. But in Wompatuck he was feeling pain and grief. We realized connecting with nature doesn't always feel good.

Many of the circle members feel when this session ends a new group should be started, and this "old" group should find a way to help protect our place in nature. Interested in either?

Clintons give Socks the boot

Now they've gone and done it.

The Clintons, I mean.

I stood by them through that whole Travelgate thing.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I found excuses for Bill when Gennifer produced those telephone tapes that linked Mario Cuomo to the Mafia and Paula sued for sexual harassment and won enough to get a nose job.

I defended Hillary when the long-lost billing records from her Little Rock law firm showed up mysteriously in her White House office and the Lincoln Bedroom had more sleepovers than the No Tell Motel.

I even castigated those right wing conspirators who dispatched Monica to the Oval Office to have her blue dress stained.

But now they've gone and done it.

The way they've treated Socks, I mean.

The nine-year-old kitty, who served the Clinton White House well through many a photo op, apparently is being fired — along with Linda Tripp and her tape recorder, incidentally — as the new Bush administration replaces the old.

One of the 10 funniest pictures of the past decade was one showing a herd of photographers down on their pot bellies with their cameras aimed at Socks, who is contemplating them with a look that asks, "Who are these crazies?"

Hillary even got a book out of Socks, as a sort of warm-up for the memoirs she plans to write for which Simon & Schuster has paid $8 million.

But I digress . . .

What is going to happen to Socks, who was once acclaimed as "the First Cat?"

At first, it was said that Socks would be adopted by Clinton's secretary, Betty Currie but after hard questioning by the White House press corps, Jake Siewert, the latest White House spokesman, hastily backed up a bit and allowed that Socks may be permitted to hang around Hillary's office in the Senate or Hillary's new house in Georgetown.

Whatever, Socks won't go along with the rest of the Clintons when they finally settle down in their New York home in Chappaqua because that will be Buddy's turf, and the Clintons' pup dog just doesn't get along well with Socks.

"(Clinton) has worked hard in the last couple of years to do his best to reconcile Socks and Buddy," said Siewert. "He will keep at it. This is a family decision."

If I know cats and dogs, this will be the equivalent of getting Arabs and Israelis to stop throwing rocks at each other in the Gaza Strip, so Bill will be able to keep his mediation skills sharp, just in case.

Wouldn't you know it, though, that the dog will win out over the cat every time?

Even though Buddy is a comparative newcomer and Socks has been around since the Arkansas days, it is the dog that gets to check out the hydrants in exclusive Chappaqua while the cat has to stay behind inside the Beltway.

The White House won't be devoid of animals, however.

Dubya has a cat, India, and a dog with the unusual name of Spot, while Laura Bush has a new dog named Barney.

I hope they treat them better than the Clintons treated Socks.

Schools get some wiggle room in budget projections

Debate focuses on special education funding plan

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset School Committee was able to put off some tough budget decisions last week, when it was announced the department would have an additional $180,000 to allocate throughout the system. The money last year made up the schools' maintenance budget. However, the town has since assumed those responsibilities, freeing up $180,000 in the schools' budget.

But the schools' budget won't be docked the $180,000. Instead, Town Manager Mark Haddad told Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey that the school committee would be able to reallocate the money as it saw fit.

"That's fantastic," committee member Rick Flynn commented, at the committee's meeting last Thursday.

"Rather than being in a position to reduce, we're now in a position to add," said committee chairman Pat Martin. "We now can look at the budget with a new perspective."

However, at least one school committee member would like to see the money used to fully fund the special education budget, rather than underfund it until a special town meeting is called in the fall, as it was the case last year.

Malvey's news came after he painted a bleak picture for the school committee on how much money the department would actually have for new teachers and initiatives. Haddad has told the school department that its budget increase would have to be contained under $600,000 in order to prevent a bigger override than the $300,000 one the town is currently facing.

The increase would bump the school budget up to $10,175,564 in FY-2002, which starts July 1.

Out of that $600,000 increase, $313,250 was tied up in salary increases and other contractual raises, leaving $286,750 available for new teachers, programs, and additional supplies. Plus, it appeared that the school committee was willing to dedicate $162,152 for the hiring of four new middle school teachers. Malvey said when all of the schools' remaining additional requests were factored in, the budget was approximately $269,000 higher than the "target" number. As a result, the school committee has asked the three school principals earlier this month, to go back and prioritize their additional budget requests.

However, earlier in the budget process, some questions arose as to whether the maintenance money had been transferred from the school budget to the town Department of Public Works' budget. As it turned out, Haddad and Finance Director Michael Buckley had sufficiently funded the DPW, and said the school department could keep the money within its budget.

The announcement creates an additional $180,000 available for new spending, without raising the budget more than the $600,000 limit.

"We can now reallocate that money into areas we had put aside," Malvey told the school committee.

But school committee member Chartis Tebbetts wants the board to reevaluate its funding plan. The committee had planned on following a precedent set last year, and hold up any funding increase for special education until the fall, when final state aid and enrollment numbers would allow the department to establish a hard number.

In past years, the schools faced huge deficits in special education funding six months after the school budget was approved, thanks to unexpected costs and an increase in children requiring services. The plan has worked well last year, as the budget was fully-funded in October. And with no deficits anticipated, and Haddad had hoped to do the same thing again. Student Services head Stephen Kaplan is looking for an additional $100,000 for FY-2002.

Tebbetts, and town Advisory Board member Maureen Jerz, called for the board to pass a "unified budget," and not separate out special education funding. They feared by separating out special education, it would place some sort of stigma on special education students.

"We should have one budget number for all students," said Tebbetts. She suggested funding the special education budget, and perhaps leaving some other line item under-funded until a future town meeting.

Jerz, who objected to the plan when first presented last year, once again outlined her objections.

"Calling this money special education money helps contribute to the culture of separatism," she said. "I don't believe any piece should be separated out, the budget should be presented as one unified piece.

"But if you're going to fund a piece separately, don't call it special education," she added. Jerz said by calling it "special education" money rather than simply "a piece" of the budget, the school committee would be "contributing to the culture that says special education is somehow different."

But Flynn and Martin, as well as fellow committee member Stephanie Noble, don't think they are doing special education a disservice by separating its line item out.

"I think [the news about an extra $180,000] is a wonderful way to play catch-up. I understand the need for a unified budget, but there is also a need for supplies and books and reading aides," Flynn said. "I don't think by having it as an outside line item we add any stigma.

Martin called the final special education spending increase number a "moving target," that could very well be $200,000 or $300,000 by the time the actual school year starts in September. "When we say we're going to pull out $100,000 for the fall meeting, people understand that number could expand to $150,000, or $200,000, or $300,000," she said.

She said if they were to underfund the athletic program $100,000, and then have special education funding come in $200,000 higher, they'd have to go ask for $200,000 to fully fund the athletic programs. And when people asked why the number had increased, the answer would "come right back" to special education.

"It worked," Martin said of the plan last year. "Certainly there was a risk; but history shows people overwhelmingly support it."

Noble took offense to any one who said the school committee was "singling out special education," and deflected funding problems on to the state. "I don't think by holding off on funding special education, we're singling it out. The state did a great job of that," she said. "And if this is the way it works for us, so be it."

Martin asked the principals to once again go back and re-prioritize their budget requests, in light of the extra $180,000.

Despite the seemingly good news, Noble didn't allow herself a smile during the budget discussions.

"There are several issues weighing heavily on my mind," she said afterwards. "I'm worried about how to spend this money. I want to do the right thing."

Martin said though the school department now has some more wiggle room, it has not been given a blank check. "After the second round of cuts, we still have more items we'd like to fund above the cost of $180,000," she said. "Nobody's going to get everything they want, we still have to prioritize."

Yearly overrides are on the table

The deciding factor, said Haddad, is how the interest and debt service payments would be affected over a 10-year course. If by having a fully-funded free cash and overlay surplus account, the town would save money in the long-run by paying off long-term debt quicker, then the proposal might be the direction the town should head.

"It will be fun to do," Haddad said about the long-term projection.

He said towns like Littleton, where he was town administrator before coming to Cohasset in 1997, and Hull, have been able to pay for municipal projects without an override because of the strength of their free cash and overlay surplus accounts.

Although Cohasset has approved a number of overrides in recent years, such as last year's $41.5 million debt exclusion override for the Deer Hill and Middle/High School construction projects, the votes usually don't come without a fight. Haddad is afraid the town's tax burden will get to the point where residents say enough is enough. "I would just be leery of overrides every year," he said. "That would be $100,000 a year on top of the 2 1/2 percent increase every year," Haddad told the board.

But Brown strongly believes a yearly override would be better for the town in the long-run. "A small override every year I can live with," he said, "rather than a big override every three years."

He added later a yearly override would "build the reserves up" and allow the town to pay off its debt quicker.

If selectmen were to approve the budget as is, the total town operating budget for FY-2002 would be $25.777 million – a 9.57 percent increase over the FY 2001 budget. The town is expecting $17.3 million in revenues from the tax levy, $7.8 million in state aid and town fees and $60,000 from other funds, totaling $25.247 million in total revenues – a $530,000 deficit.

A good portion of the deficit, $230,000, will be off-set through the overlay surplus account, leaving $300,000 unfunded.

The $300,000 deficit is made up primarily of an 18 percent increase in insurance costs for town employees. An override will be needed to cover the deficit. If the override fails, the town will have to cut $300,000 from the budget, and Haddad has warned that would probably mean layoffs.

Brown and fellow Selectman Michael Sullivan told Haddad they had some ideas for trimming the budget, but held off making their comments for a further time.

The school department budget will take up approximately 60 percent of the total town budget, if the school committee votes in a $10,143,555 budget as Haddad as recommended.

The town also will be increasing debt service payments by more than $556,000 in FY-2002, which starts July 1.

Also seeing a $555,000 budgetary increase is the town sewer department. However, Hadadd said that will be offset by an increase in revenues to the sewer department.

though those scores rank among the highest in the state. This year, the Deer Hill ranked 63rd out of 294 towns and school districts.

But school officials say the failing grade isn't indicative of the type of education Deer Hill students are receiving, and questioned how much emphasis should be placed on the improvement rates.

"It was probably an unrealistic goal," said Callahan, of the improvement mark the state had for Deer Hill. "Let's suppose a child takes a test and gets a 70, and you tell them to get an 80, and they do. But if they get a 90, and you tell them to get a 95, they might not be able to raise it."

"The state doesn't care where you currently are, you're expected to improve every year," said Curriculum Coordinator Ruth Fennessey. She said though the school's scores did go up, and less children failed the test in 2000, than in 1998, the state "indicated we didn't improve."

But both Callahan, Fennessey and School Committee Chairman Pat Martin think the state is wrong in comparing this year's scores to the previous two years' scores.

"In the past few years since the regulations went through, the state has kept changing the curriculum," said Callahan. "Every time you change it, it requires changes to the test."

Callahan called the MCAS a "quasi-standardized test" and said because the test keeps changing, "it's tough to make comparisons."

Martin agreed with Callahan. "It highlights the overall issue people have had with MCAS…How much is MCAS a true test of achievement in the fourth grade, and how much is it a test of the [curriculum] frameworks?" she asked. "The three years the test has been given, the curriculum has shifted each of those three years."

She pointed out an example two years ago when the state told school departments it would be testing fourth graders on Native Americans, and then decided to test on ancient Greeks, after the books had already been purchased.

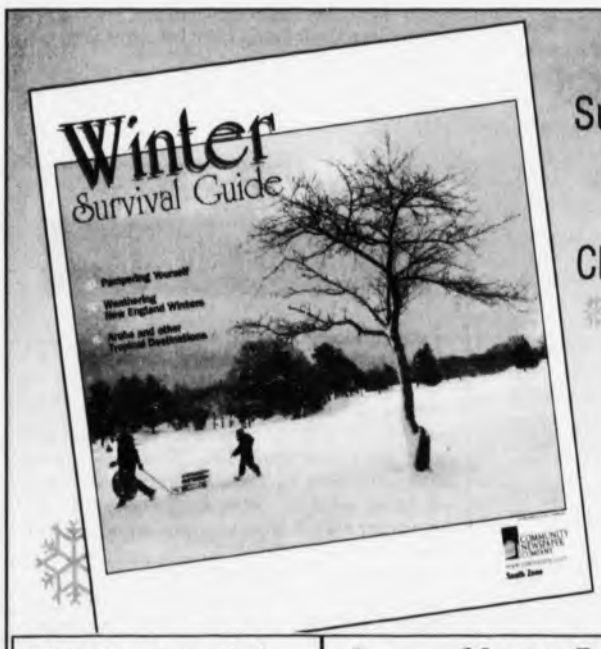
Martin also pointed out that last November the Massachusetts Association of School Committees asked the state to suspend using MCAS as a graduation requirement, until the state finalizes its curriculum frameworks. She said once that happens, and teachers are brought up to date, then the MCAS could be used as an achievement ruler. "Once they do that, everyone thinks they'll be fine. 'Tell us what you want, leave us alone, let us teach it, get it into the classrooms and then test us,'" Martin said.

But school officials are taking the failing grade seriously, and do plan on addressing issues raised by the test.

"We're not going to be glib and say 'Oh we're not looking into it,'" said Martin. "We're going to be crunching the numbers and finding what area need to improve."

Callahan said he has budgeted for extra money to help students struggling with the MCAS. "I've proposed money next year's school budget for fourth, fifth and sixth grades to benefit the children who have had some problems, through programs in the summer, or after school or Saturdays."

He said Deer Hill students seem to be struggling the most with the test's writing samples, and that would be the area the school tries to improve the most.



Fennessey said the schools would be "holding special sessions for students who need assistance." She said the school department has been consulting with other area school districts, and will have a consultant come in this spring to "help teachers with the writing process, and how it could be improved."

But Fennessey and Callahan both insist that the failing grades don't mean Deer Hill students are receiving a substandard education.

"Across the state educators are having the same concern," said Fennessey. "Using only one device as a test as a measure of achievement, is really not an adequate procedure."

"We had more children getting advanced scores in 2000 than in 1999 and 1998, and had less children failing over the three years," Callahan said. "I look at that as improving. How do you say we're not meeting expectations?"

The MCAS tests were given last spring to fourth, eighth and tenth graders. Students were tested in English and language arts, math, and science and technology.

Hockey team continues to progress

Win over Randolph shows what's right and wrong with this team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

This team is going to be something over the next year or two. Of that, Dennis Walsh seems confident. The prospects for this season, however, are an entirely different matter in the opinion of the longtime coach.

The bulk of the talent on the Cohasset hockey team comes from the underclasses. The top two scorers—sophomores Greg O'Connell (nine goals, 12 assists) and Matt Davis (eight goals, nine assists)—lead a group of talented neophytes who appear to be not quite ready for prime time.

"This group just doesn't have the maturity yet that you need to compete on a consistent basis," observed Walsh recently of his 4-6-1 team. "We've got as much talent in our locker room as most team around here, but we just don't seem to have that experience that separates the good teams from the rest."

Walsh, whose been walking the Cohasset High bench for 32 years as a head coach, points to his squad's most recent game as Exhibit A for his contention, a 10-6 win over a clearly less talented Randolph team last Wednesday.

For two plus periods, Walsh feels his Skippers played down to the level of their competition. The fact that they seemed to finally realize a sense of urgency once the Blue Devils tied the game at six early in the final frame, and reeled off four unanswered tallies to win going away, doesn't detract from this original contention, he opines.

"A mature team doesn't need a sense of urgency to put a team away," he offered. "A mature team doesn't give a team like that a chance to win; they take the fight out of them early."

Sophomore Greg O'Connell (#8) leads a host of talented young players for the Cohasset High hockey team.

This is not to say that Walsh feels his team must wait until next season to cash in on its potential. In fact, he believes there is a very real chance this group could qualify for the state tourney with a .500 or better record.

"I'm encouraged by a lot of the progress we've made, and I think we're going to be better over the second half of the season," he said. "We really haven't been blown out by anyone this year, so a couple of the losses we've had could have easily been wins if one or two things

Swim team stays afloat

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDANT

"We had kind of a lull this week, but it'll whip up," said first year swim team coach Jamie Kearney.

This 'lull' is due to the last two scheduled meets, against league opponents in Duxbury and Barnstable, being cancelled.

But, at 4-2, the Cohasset/Scituate swim team is turning some heads, especially with the disadvantages facing them.

To start, they do not have a practice facility, except the Weymouth MDC Pool for an hour three times a week.

"Wouldn't it be great if we had a pool for these kids who dedicate themselves?" asked Kearney earlier in the season.

Still, Kearney and her team have stayed optimistic about it.

"It is not that bad," grinned Scituate sophomore breaststroke specialist Amanda Turner of the MDC Pool. "It's not perfect, but it's fine."

"It is very difficult to deal with the limited practice time, and distant practice site," added senior captain Chris Golden of Cohasset. "But it also brings the team together. We have to work harder because of these factors."

Because of the long commute to the pool, competitors are forced to study on the bus, yet another disadvantage for this team.

"Sometimes we ask the bus driver to keep the light on for us," said Kearney.

Third, it was only recently worked out with the MDC Pool that the team could practice after Jan. 30. Though their last dual meet is the 31st, there was still the All-Conference meet, sectionals, and districts all through February.

Fourth, with 29 of the 34 participants being females, competing with all boy teams has posed some difficulties. Both of the Sailor/Skipper losses this year have come against all male teams in Taunton and Middleboro, and the score would have been quite different if the points totaled by the ladies were added in.

Still, Kearney and her team have stayed optimistic about it.

"We are not counting [Middleboro] as a loss," noted Turner.

In addition, she views having practices with mixed genders as "just extra competition."

One final handicap that weighs this squad down is the fact that it is made up of two different towns.

Still, Kearney and her team have stayed optimistic about it.

"We don't differ at all," asserted Kearney, a native of Scituate herself.

"They are mature young adults, and there is no problem between Cohasset and Scituate, no problem between boys and girls."

In order to help bridge the town gap, one senior captain was chosen from each town. Golden of Cohasset and Jen Foley of Scituate have captained the team admirably in the eyes of both Kearney and the team.

"I am thrilled," said Kearney about having Golden and Foley as captains. "They are great leaders, and all the 'good stuff' is coming from them."

"We have really good captains," chimed in Turner. "They have a lot of spirit, and they hold the team together."

Even though these hardships have posed quite a burden to the members of the team, posting a 4-2 record is quite impressive.

"I give these kids a lot of credit," effused, Kearney. "There are a lot of adults who could not do what these kids do."

Parents fight, kids watch

FROM THE SIDELINES

JULIE ANN NEVERO

Ever see the movie "The Sandlot?"

The 1993 coming-of-age film set in the 1950s invites us into the lives of nine young neighborhood boys who spend their summer days doing nothing but playing baseball. Led by its most promising prospect, Benny "The Jet" Rodriguez, the group played ball on a nearby sandlot everyday, morning to sunset.

The team was good. Real good. But the kids were not part of a league, they played no opponents, they didn't keep score, and they didn't argue over who played what position. Likewise, there were no coaches deciding who got to play and who didn't, no umpires calling the game, and no parental spectators in the stands making calls of their own.

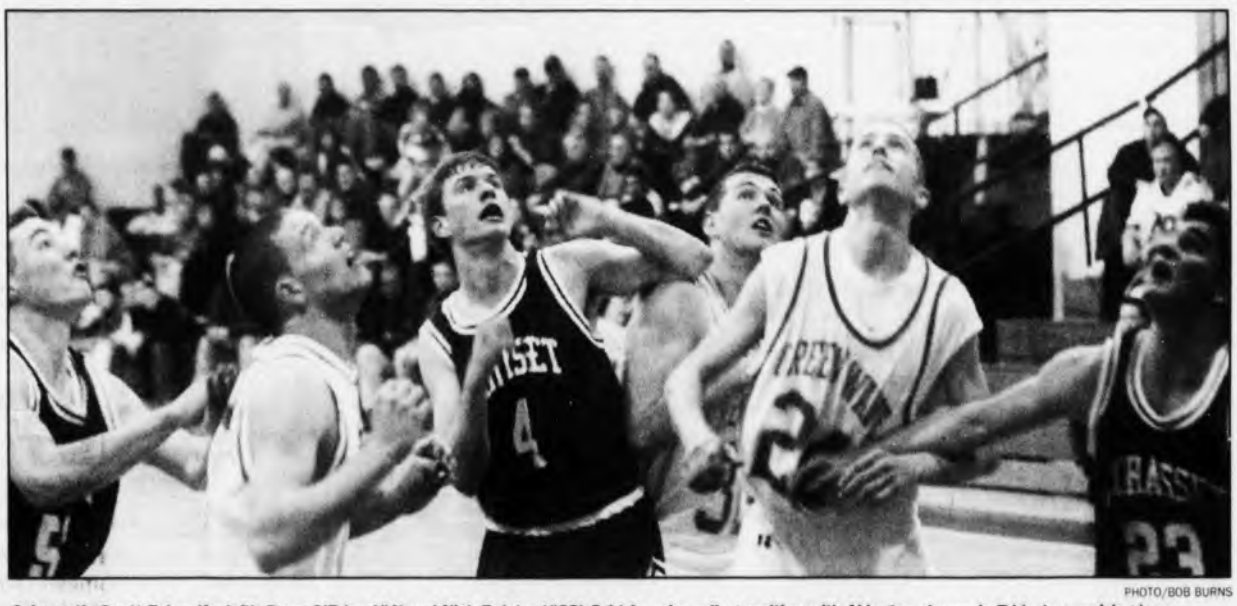
The kids just played and because of it, they had nothing but fun.

But unfortunately, this is just a movie. A piece of fiction. And it appears nowadays, in reality, it couldn't be further from the truth.

No kid could ever be happy just playing the game, could he/she? No scorekeeping? No winners?

What a nightmare, right?

Think again.



Recent goings on at organized youth/high school sporting events in Massachusetts involving parents fighting with each other and their children's coaches have indeed been a nightmare.

In just two months, the Bay State has been rocked by numerous reports of parental sports rage on display at local high school ice hockey games. The most recent being a father of a high school hockey player accused of attacking an opposing coach at a Taunton rink.

That father was Robert McDonnell, whose son plays for Foxboro. He allegedly shoved assistant Mansfield hockey coach Erik Madsen into a steal door outside the locker room after the game between the two schools. Madsen suffered a bruise on his head.

Just a few weeks prior to this inci-

Skippers shocked by Green Wave

It has happened before, and it will happen again.

Some nights, a team just cannot get on track. That is exactly what happened to the Cohasset varsity basketball team when it suffered its second loss in league play this season, falling hard to Abington, 57-37.

"We played hard, but some nights it is just not there" reasoned 10th year coach Ron Ford. "You can't dwell on it."

The Green Wave, playing an "extended 2-3 zone," according to Cohasset captain Erik Shea, which cut down on the Skippers' perimeter game very effectively, forcing them into a gaggle of early turnovers. The Green Wave also clearly placed a heavy emphasis on stopping senior captain TJ Bilodeau, one of the Skippers' best shooters.

"It wasn't that we were not shooting the ball well," said Bilodeau. "It was that we weren't shooting the

Coach Sweeney encouraged by showing at Cohasset tourney

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset wrestling team lost to Hanover for the fist time since 1993 on Wednesday, 43-36. However, the Skippers may have regained a measure of respect by besting Hanover, along with three other teams at Saturday's annual Cohasset Wrestling Tournament.

A sixth place finish for the Cohasset wrestlers in a nine team tourney might not sound like much—that is, until one considers the five teams that finished ahead of them: Duxbury, Marshfield, Rockland, Lynnfield and Middleboro, all quality programs from much larger schools.

Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney was more concerned with the squads his young team outpointed: Scituate, Hanover and Norwell.

"It feels like we might be starting to get on a bit of a role," said Sweeney following the tourney. "We've got a couple of younger guys who are showing steady progress, and just about everyone wrestled well today."

To no surprise, the Skippers were led by Dan Littauer, who rode to the championship at the dent, a Holbrook man allegedly assaulted his son's own hockey coach. A police officer who witnessed the attack said David M. Sullivan, 45, grabbed Avon-Holbrook coach Michael Devlin, pushed him into an empty locker room and hit him.

While injuries suffered in these specific attacks were minor, a Lynnfield man six months ago was not so lucky.

A fight between two fathers at a youth hockey game in Reading back in July 2000 led to the beating death of Michael Costin. Thomas Junta, of Reading, is currently awaiting trial for manslaughter after an argument with the father of four over rough play on the ice between the sons of the two men ultimately claimed Costin's life.

A death at a youth hockey game? Parents beating up coaches in locker rooms? How far are these irresponsible adults willing to go? Apparently until someone else stops breathing.

You know what's funny? There are people on Capitol Hill trying to put a strangle hold on filmmakers in Hollywood because they say movie violence is negatively influencing our nation's youth. As of right now, it appears some of our nation's parents are doing just fine in that category.

It is alleged that while McDonnell was attacking Madsen at the Taunton rink, his son joined in on the assault by throwing a wet paper towel at the Mansfield coach.

While the aforementioned violent outbursts have all involved fathers, it now seems that mothers are starting to get in on the action, making their attacks to the classroom.

Twenty-one first graders last Friday witnessed an assault on their 53-year-old Jamaica Plain teacher, who was pushed to the ground by an irate mother of an unruly kid. The aftermath of the alleged attack on Carla Reveliotty, was displayed on the front page of Monday's edition of the Boston Herald in a gripping close-up photo of the teacher's face, fractured cheekbone, black eye and all.

"I saw a parent pushing down a teacher," six-year-old Thylia Cromartie told the Herald Saturday. "Everybody was crying in the class."

Boston schools officials have reportedly obtained an order barring 32-year-old Angela Brison—the alleged attacker—and her son from the school, the Herald reported.

Imagine that? A first-grader not being able to attend school because his mom beat up his teacher?

Ridiculous.

But it appears that's the kind of world that we've come to live in. One in which children cannot even look up to their parents. Those days of playing sports for the shear fun of it like the young boys in "The Sandlot" seem to be long gone. Those days are gone because adults got involved. It's as simple as that.

Is this statement a little harsh? Perhaps. But in light of recent events, it seems to be truth.

Because adults have invaded the child's sports world, the focus of the game has shifted from simply having fun to winning. And if a team doesn't win, the focus turns to who's to blame. Once that's found out, the focus becomes what to do about it. The rest is history.

We sports writers witness this fact every time we cover a game. At basketball games, for example, it's not uncommon to hear parents in the stands screaming at officials when they disagree with a call, booing and hissing when an opposing team member takes a foul-shot, cheering on their children if an argument between an opposing player should break out on the floor, or encouraging their children to return a foul with a foul.

Do these instances amount to that of hitting someone? Perhaps not. But are they violent? Yes.

Some adults might argue that this happens everywhere. On every field, court, rink, track, pool, etc. And in most cases, this is a correct assumption. But does that make it right? Absolutely not.

Just as we sports writers witness these troubling actions, we are humbled by the fact that in most cases, the athletes are able to leave it on the field, court, rink, track, pool, etc. Whether it be offering a handshake, a cheer, or sometimes even a hug, the athletes seem to realize that whatever happens, happens and that it's all in the spirit of the game.

The question remains, then: If the athletes can leave their frustrations on the playing field, why can't their parents?

It is a question that has garnered national attention in the media, and has made its way into Hollywood story lines (i.e. a recent episode of NBC's "ER" in which the County General emergency room doctors are flagged by players and parents from opposing football teams involved in a riot sparked by the accidental injury of one player. Also, an episode a few years back of the now-cancelled CBS show "Picket Fences," in which children on a youth basketball team sought and received a court order to bar their parents and coaches from attending their games.)

Perhaps what's even more troubling than the question itself is whether it will ever be answered. As of right now, an answer seems awfully far away.

Skippers shocked by Green Wave

ball enough."

Cohasset shot 6-for-22 in the second half, 12-for-38 for the game. Abington was not much better, though, shooting field goals at a 37% rate (20-for-54).

What was very surprising was that the Skippers attempted only eight 3-pointers for the entire game. This low output was due in large part to the blanketing of Bilodeau by the Abington guards..

"We never got into a flow, offensively," noted Ford, whose squad was further limited by early foul troubles.

Still, Ford was pleased with the defensive effort he saw, with the Skippers relinquishing only 57 points.

"And a lot of those were just junk points at the end," reported Shea.

The Skippers have not fully recovered from their spell of sickness, with Shea playing only two minutes due to the flu, and numerous others playing with lesser symptoms.

unior guard Liam Martin saw his first minutes since an injury against Norton sidelined him on December 22.

In the game, junior point guard Matt Bilodeau led the team with nine points, while senior captain TJ was next with seven, a perfect 3-for-3 from the floor.

Though it was tough to lose to another SSL team, Ford seems optimistic about their re-match at home with Abington in a few weeks.

"They are very athletic, but when we are healthy, we are two very similar teams," said Ford.

Shea was even more to the point, asserting "There is no way they are a better team than us."

Despite the loss, Cohasset is still very much alive in the hunt for the South Shore League, especially after formerly undefeated Carver's loss to the Clippers of Norwell.

"We are still only one game out," acknowledged Ford, his Skippers needing to win only two of their last nine games to qualify for the state tournament. "We still have the destiny in our hands."

Carver is now the only team in the SSL with one loss, while Norwell, Norton, and Cohasset all have three. The Skippers other two losses came at the hands of Carver and non-league opponent Scituate.

It appears quite possible that as many as six SSL teams could qualify for the state tourney. The four just mentioned are pretty good locks, and Hull and Abington definitely have a shot.

"Our league usually does pretty well in non-league games," explained Ford, who himself is 4-1 outside the league, the only loss coming to Scituate in the Holiday Tournament.

"Our first goal was to qualify for the tournament," he continued. "We want to try to get as high a seed as possible."

had been different. Hopefully, the second time around against some of these teams we'll be able to do a few things better that'll make the difference."

For what it's worth, he does like the attitude and work ethic of his young charges.

"I've got a good bunch of kids here," asserted the coach. "They work hard and want to get better. Win or lose, it's a nice group to be around."

Cohasset captain Ken Portavana (#5) and Jay Rasmussen (#12) celebrate goal against Randolph.

Acknowledging the full side of the glass from the Randolph game, Walsh did note "The kids showed what they're capable of when they focussed in in that third period. If the kids can find a way of playing at that level on a consistent basis, there aren't too many teams that will want to play us."

O'Connell had six points in this game (one goal, five assists), with Peter Whoriskey and Tom Anderson (a junior and sophomore, respectively) netting two goals apiece.

One area in which the Skippers clearly have an advantage is depth. Most local high school teams seem to have one line that sees upwards of 50 percent of the ice time, and produces an even higher percentage of the offensive output. Walsh trots out three lines and five defensemen in a regular rotation, and gets well dispersed production.

"We're getting consistent scoring from all three lines, which is a nice advantage to have because other teams can't concentrate on stopping just one or even two lines," assessed Walsh. "I think the area we need to improve in is defensively."

It would appear that inexperience is most in evidence here. The Skippers start junior Dan Kinchla in net, who not only never played high school goalie before this year, but never even played high school hockey.

Walsh asserts that Kinchla's reflexes and instincts are Grade A, but again comes back to the point that there is no substitute for seasoning.

He makes the same point about freshman defenseman Mike Devine, of whom he concedes "is going to make occasional mistakes, but his upside is too high to keep him off the ice."

"I knew going into the season that there'd be some growing pains," Walsh acknowledged. "The important thing is that we keep making progress, and so far we've done that. That's really all I can ask"

POLICE BRIEFS

Sign up for Citizens Police Academy

The Citizens Police Academy sponsored by Cohasset police starts Feb. 5.

Classes will be conducted from 6-9 p.m. once a week for nine weeks. Curriculum includes criminal and constitutional law, court procedures, probable cause and elements of crimes, motor vehicle law and accident investigation, firearms and use of force, patrol procedures, traffic enforcement and community policing. Ride-alongs with police officers may also be included.

Applications are available at the police station on Elm Street.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said there is no charge for participants. The estimated $3,000 cost of conducting the academy that may include some overtime to cover shifts is being paid for through a state grant earmarked for community policing services.

The class size at the academy is limited to 12 people, age 16 and older. Noonan said police hope to get a cross-section of teenagers, parents and senior citizens.

"We hope participants will see what we really do, how people are treated and how we do our job," he said.

Yocum praised

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan commended Officer Richard Yocum for his "outstanding police work" when he helped rescue a Cohasset man who had fallen through ice on Lily Pond while skating.

As Yocum was on his way to work Jan. 3, he picked up a report of a man through the ice on his car scanner and drove to the pond. He grabbed a canoe from the shore, pushed it over several hundred yards of ice, hopped in and then helped the man hold on to the side until the Cohasset Fire Department rescue team arrived.

"Your quick assessment and decisive action, taken at no small personal risk, prevented a potential tragedy," Noonan wrote.

The victim was treated at South Shore Hospital for hypothermia.

"Your professionalism and dedication is one that I am extremely proud of," Noonan said. "This type of action brings credit to yourself, your department and the town of Cohasset."

Police memorial fund drive

Cohasset police hope residents will contribute to the Massachusetts Law Enforcement Memorial Foundation that plans to erect a permanent memorial to the 260 officers in the state who were killed in the line of duty. Groundbreaking for the memorial at Ashburton Park at the State Capitol will take place during Police Memorial Week in May 2001.

All donations are tax deductible. Checks should be made out to the Mass. Law Enforcement Memorial Foundation and sent to the Cohasset Police Dept., 62 Elm St., Cohasset 02025. For more information, contact Officer Jeffrey R. Treanor, 383-1055 or 383-1212, evenings.

OBITUARIES

Francis M. Chase

Francis Michael Chase, 80, of Cohasset, founder and former CEO of Chase Corporation, died at his home.

Born in Canton, Mr. Chase attended Canton High School and graduated with honors. He received a bachelor's degree from the University of New Hampshire.

He played football for the University of New Hampshire, was an officer in the ROTC and a member of the Theta Kappa Phi fraternity.

He served in the Army as a second lieutenant in the 26th Coast Artillery Battalion and was stationed in Reykjavik, Iceland and England. He landed in Normandy in the D-Day invasion and also participated in the Battle of the Bulge. He was promoted to captain of the 495th Anti Aircraft Artillery Battalion.

He was commended with the Bronze Star Medal, the European African Middle Eastern Service Medal and the American Defense Service Medal.

After returning from World War II, Mr. Chase along with his brother and father founded Chase & Sons which later was renamed Chase Corporation and now trades on the American Stock Exchange. He was the CEO and chairman of the board from 1948 to 1988.

He was an active trustee and director in a number of academic, Catholic, community and business institutions and organizations including Derby Academy, Thayer Academy, Family Counseling and Guidance Centers, South Shore Playhouse Associates, the Young Presidents Organization and the Boston Stock Exchange.

He was a communicant of St. Anthony Church in Cohasset and the Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham.

He leaves his wife, Barbara (Sullivan) Chase, a daughter, Anne C. Sheehy; two sons, Francis G. Chase III and Michael C. Chase; and five grandchildren, Courtney and Conor Chase and Thomas, Margaret and Phoebe Chase.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 11 a.m. Friday, Jan. 26, at St. Anthony's in Cohasset. Interment will be at Cohasset Central Cemetery.

Calling hours will be from 2 to 4 and 7 to 9 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 25, at McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to St. Anthony Church or Glastonbury Abbey.

Robert F. Stanton

Robert Frank "Buzzy" Stanton, 49, of Cohasset, died Jan. 17, 2001, at South Shore Hospital after a long illness.

Mr. Stanton was born in Boston, son of Katherine (Magullion) Stanton of Cohasset and the late Gerard J. Stanton. He graduated from Cohasset High School and Massachusetts Hospital School of Canton. He attended the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Mr. Stanton was a lifelong resident of Cohasset.

He was a member of the George H. Mealy Post 118 and the Sons of the American legion. He enjoyed music, NASCAR Racing particularly in Loudon, N.H. and the Indianapolis 500. He played Little League baseball as a youth.

Besides his mother, he leaves a brother, Jerry Stanton of Clive, Iowa; two sisters, Katherine Barker of Framingham and Mary Hynes of Southborough; four nieces, Katherine E. Barker, Kristine E. Barker, Andrea L. Stanton and Brianna L. Stanton; and two nephews, Patrick S. Hynes and Matthew J. Hynes; and a godson, Michael Calorio.

A Memorial Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony Church, Cohasset. Interment was private at Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Remembrances may be made to the South Shore Visiting Nurse Association, 100 Baystate Dr., Braintree, 02184.

IT'S HAPPENING

Relay for life

The planning committee for the American Cancer Society's 5th annual Relay For Life in Cohasset is looking for additional volunteer members. If you are interested in serving on the planning committee, having a team becoming a sponsor, or volunteering at the event, please call Lyn Previte at 383-9723 or Justine Vanderlugt at 383-2956.

The Relay For Life is scheduled for May 18-19, at Cohasset High School. Funds raised through Relay for Life go toward the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, prevention, detection and patient services.

Splash Odyssey

Come to the 'Drownedhogs" Sixth Annual Swim Saturday, on Jan. 27, at the Mary Jeanette Murray Bath House, Nantasket Beach, at 11 a.m.

Come frolic with more than 200 swimmers and more than 1,000 spectators as those "wackos for charity" plunge into the chilly Atlantic to determine how long New Englanders will have to wait for Spring. What a great winter to send on it's way, with our sixth annual drowned hogs swim. The Bath House at Nantasket Beach is heated so your crew will be comfortable to get great shots and/or interviews. There will be a post swim party at The Dry dock featuring music by Knuckle Sandwich.

The charity we support is Wellspring Multservice Center located in Hull but serving the entire South Shore for over 14 years. Services include: food bank, thrift shop, domestic violence intervention and referrals, computer instruction and high school equivalency training and much more. Last year over $15,000 was raised. For more information, contact Al Bollinger at (781) 925-4573, Jeanne Nicholson (617) 241-5795 or Wellspring (781) 925-3211.

PSO hosts St. Valentine's Soiree on Feb. 10 in Hingham

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello Everyone,

Well, it has been a while since we have had a Schools In column, sorry about that but we are back in action.

Please send all information and news in regards to school information or any events that may be happening to me at 622 CJC Highway, email to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com or phone it to me at 923-1057. Very soon, I will have a fax line to add which will be wonderful for all involved.

Now, on to the news.... Feb. 10 is the night for us all to get together at a wonderful event and enjoy a great night together with good friends. The St. Valentine's Soiree is being held by the Cohasset PSO on this night at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham. Come and join us for a night of dancing, DJ music, socializing and of course, the wonderful Chinese Basket Raffle. It is from 7-11 p.m. and tickets are being sold by members of the PSO. The cost is $40 per person/$75 per couple and it is definitely well worth the money! So get your sitters lined up and come on out to the is fantastic night of fun! If you have any questions or want to buy your tickets now, call any PSO member or call Janeen Culhane at 383-2349.

Speaking of the Chinese Basket Raffle, this year brings many wonderful themes. We have a Coffee Lovers Basket, Tea in the Afternoon, Sports Spectacular, Cohasset Kitchens, Baby Boy/Girl Baskets, Arts and Crafts just to name a few. The raffle tickets are $1 a ticket and can be bought starting Friday, Jan. 26 by contacting Jen Piepenbrink at 923-1057 or emailing her at jenpiep@yahoo.com. Make sure to look for information coming home from the Joseph Osgood and Deer Hill Schools as well. This is a great way to support your schools as well as have the many chances of winning one of these spectacular baskets!

The nominating Committee of the Cohasset PSO is seeking candidates to run for parent representatives for both the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools for the coming two-year term, (2001-2003.) Each School Council's comprised of the principal, teachers, parent representatives and community representatives. They are charged with formulating and updating the schools improvement plan, missions and goals, as well as establishing focus areas to be studied each year. Parent representatives are elected for a two-year term by the parent body of each school and must have a student(s) in attendance at the school they are serving for the duration of their term. There are two seats open at the Osgood and one seat open at the Deer Hill School for the coming term. Individuals interested in serving as a parent representative are asked to submit a brief statement about themselves and their interest in the School Council to the PSO Nominating Committee, c/o Susan Jaffe, PO Box 30, no later than Monday, Feb. 12. Balloting will take place March 2-9. New Council members will be announced at the PSO Board Meeting March 20 and introduced at the PSO Annual Meeting in May.

The Cohasset METCO program would like to thank all of the community members and school staff who supported the Annual METCO wreath and candle sale. They raised much-appreciated money toward the senior scholarships. This is a great program to help support!

Just a reminder to all parents and Cohasset host families of METCO students. The Osgood and Deer Hill schools will have Early Release days on Thursday, Feb. 8 and Feb. 15 at 1 p.m. All Cohasset host families may arrange with their Boston families some after-school activities from 1:00-2:30 before the METCO bus leaves for Boston.

If any of you have any interest in the METCO host family program, please contact Olivia Baldwin, 383-1866 or Allison Moskow, 383-9242.

The Community Relations Committee of the PSO would like to thank the following people who have generously donated their time to drive the Senior Shuttle: JoAnne Higgins, MaryKay Richardson, Joan Andrus, Kellie Gaumer, Mary Goodwin, Nancy Teague, SallyAnn Quebec, Nancy Froio, Shelanne Durkin, Mary Kate McKenna, Ed Culhane, Janeen Culhane and Mary Mastromarino. Your enthusiasm has made organizing this program possible. Also, thanks to JoAnne Higgins, Nancy Teague and Lori Fitzgerald for baking(during a very busy holiday time) Senior Christmas Treats! This kind of community support is so great to hear! Thank you to everyone for all your wonderful efforts.

Thanks to Maggies Corner in Cohasset for the wonderful help with the Osgood School Intergenerational Tea!

We have had some wonderful things happening at the Osgood and Deer Hill schools in terms of Curriculum Enrichment. Maybe you have heard your child(ren) talking about them at home. These quality arts and science programs are brought to your children by the Cohasset Parent School Organization. This is just one way that your generous support and contributions of PSO sponsored programs throughout the year directly benefit all our children. This year, the children have already taken part in a program at the South Shore Art Center entitled, "Hands of the Ancestors," have had a visit from a local meteorologist and have learned a new way to think about poetry from David Zucker. There are many more exciting programs to come, from the Hingham Symphony Orchestra, to a demonstration of the various properties of magnets, to learning the most up-to-date facts about dinosaurs from staff at the Museum of Science. A listing of upcoming dates will be posted here in this column next week with some photos coming in the near future. Make sure to ask your children all about it.

Our final piece of this week is a very important one, EMERGENCY SCHOOL CLOSING PROCEDURES! Now that winter is upon us, the Cohasset PSO would like to take an opportunity to review emergency school closing procedures for parents and/or contacts for all the students in grades K-6. During an unscheduled school closing due to weather or an unforeseen emergency, the following will take place at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools. After notification from the Office of the Superintendent to the principals, the PSO representatives will contact the room mothers from both the Osgood and the Deer Hill Schools to begin calls to parents or emergency contacts. For this reason, it is imperative that your Emergency Forms have been completed and returned to the appropriate school offices and that any updates or changes are made when needed. Closings are also announced on local TV stations, 4, 5 and 7 and radio stations, WBZ and WHDH. Closings will also be posted at the Osgood web site, www.ssec.org/idis/cohasset/osgood/Osmain.htm. During an unscheduled school closing, the buses travel in their original routes. Students from the Osgood School who take the bus will not be let off the bus unless there is a parent or contact person waiting for them. If no one is there, the student will be returned to the school. The primary reason for this policy is the safety of the child. Parents and contacts may always choose to pick up a child during an emergency closing, but need to check that child out with the staff or PSO representatives who may be at the school. You must be listed as a contact person to take a child who is not your own from the Osgood School during an emergency closing. Walkers will be dismissed from school if the room mother has reached a parent or contact person. If a contact is not made, the walker will be kept at the school until the regular dismissal time. Students from the Deer Hill School whose parents or contact cannot be reached, will be paired with a friend where an adult will be present. Please have a plan in place with your child in case of an emergency early dismissal. In the event that one of the schools is evacuated, the same steps will be taken. The Osgood will go to the Deer Hill and then be dismissed, and the Deer Hill will go to the Osgood. As always, the primary concern of the superintendent and principals of both schools is the safety of our children. Please remember that during an unforeseen school closing, a parent or contact person for every child needs to be notified. Your patience and understanding of the emergency school closing procedures will ensure a smooth and safe transition for your child. Make sure to cut this out and post it where it will be read by everyone!

Thanks for reading and we will talk to you next week. Jen Piepenbrink 622 CJC Highway jenpiep@yahoo.com 923-1057

The Swedish invasion

Local authors pen South Shore history

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

If you think the Irish were the only immigrants to make this area their new home, think again.

Two local men are working hard to tell a tale of another group that traveled across the Atlantic Ocean to find a better life.

Lloyd F. Thompson of Norwell and James E. Benson of West Bridgewater are two authors collaborating on the writing of a new book—a photographic history illustrating the build-up of the Swedish population in Brockton since the 19th century.

"We have photos going in the book which date back to 1867," Thompson said. "And the history of the Swedish population coming to Brockton is quite interesting."

With both authors of Swedish descent themselves, putting the book together just made sense.

"It's a pure labor of love for us," Thompson said. "But it's also a story that's never been told."

Thompson said when the book is finished, it will span five chapters on topics including the journey (of the Swedes) to America, families, occupations and businesses of Swedes in America, a section on Swedish people in the armed services, and a chapter on Swedish leisure activities.

Thompson has no release date for the book just yet, but he said his goal is to have all the materials put together in March.

Benson said both he and Thompson have been working hard to complete the book, but there are a lot of details to take care of—collecting old pictures, making phone calls, conducting interviews, finding people, and searching through various photo archives—there's plenty of work to be done.

Both authors have been successful in terms of finding old pictures covering local Swedish history, but they have been calling on the public to help them as well.

"You have to do research to get those kinds of old photos," Thompson said. "In order to get them, we've been sending out letters to people, using contacts we have, and also through appealing to the public. People have actually been calling us with rare photos and information."

A Brockton native, Thompson said he was always interested in those Swedes that came before him. He often wondered, he said, why so many Swedish people decided to start new lives in Brockton.

Thompson came to know Benson through his work at the First Evangelical Lutheran Church in Brockton — the oldest Lutheran Church in New England. The two are chairmen of the archives located within the church where so many Swedish immigrants attended services.

Last June, Benson pitched the idea of writing a book on the history of Brockton. Thompson agreed as long as they could work some Swedish history into the book.

"At first, the book was going to be more of a history of Brockton itself," Benson said. "But as we went along, we started looking at the Swedish immigrant population."

Both Thompson and Benson agreed it would be a good idea to change the focus of the book so that the subject matter centered more on Brockton's Swedish heritage.

"They came here for the lure of a better life, the promise of doing better," Thompson said of the many Swedish immigrants who came to Brockton.

"Long ago, Brockton was the leading shoe-producing area in the country, and many Swedish people went to Brockton because of all the factories that existed there. There were plenty of jobs available."

"A lot of (Swedish immigrants) came to Brockton to get involved with the booming shoe business, but a lot of them came to start their own businesses. They started all kinds of businesses—pharmacies, bakeries, floral shops, variety stores, and even small grocery stores. Some of immigrants also got into professions like law and medicine as well. They did it all."
-Lloyd F. Thompson, author

And so the focus of the book changed in order to highlight more than a century of Swedish history.

"A lot of (Swedish immigrants) came to Brockton to get involved with the booming shoe business, but a lot of them came to start their own businesses," Thompson said. "They started all kinds of businesses—pharmacies, bakeries, floral shops, variety stores, and even small grocery stores. Some of immigrants also got into professions like law and medicine as well. They did it all."

Real estate kept healthy in 2000

Last year was a tumultuous one for the stock markets, but real estate remained a solid investment even as the NASDAQ Composite Index of high tech stocks took a 40 percent hit.

Around the country, housing inventory lagged behind demand, keeping prices up. Nationally, some 5 million existing homes and 892,000 new homes were sold in 2000.

Real Estate

In Massachusetts, the pace of single-family home sales continued to moderate during the second half of 2000, according to a recent analysis by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR).

"Across the state, housing is drawing much of its strength from the healthy local economy. This is most evident in eastern Massachusetts where income and job growth are acting as catalysts to pull new buyers into the market," said former MAR President Fred Meyer.

"The steady influx of out-of-state residents relocating to the Boston area for work, along with the region's growing immigrant population, are two elements helping to stabilize our market," he added.

Fluctuations in the financial markets, growing reluctance on the part of consumers to take on additional debt, and rising interest rates late in the spring of 2000 all factored into a slightly softened demand for residential real estate during the summer months, a peak time for activity, the MAR said in its recent report.

Sales of detached single-family homes declined 9.8 percent in the third quarter, from 13,918 units in the July-September period a year ago to 12,554 in the same period in 2000. Also, condominium sales fell 3.4 percent, from 3,832 units in the third quarter of 1999 to 3,702 in the comparable period this year.

The decrease in sales over the three-month summer season marks the fifth consecutive quarter in which detached single-family home sales have declined from the same period one year earlier.

Norwell teen stays dedicated to others

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

This continues our on-going campaign to recognize local teens who give back to their communities. Watch for a new Spirit of Community feature each month in Living. We welcome your nominations. Please see our ballot on page 10.

Spirit of Community

While many high-school students are out at the mall, Alexandra Selby, otherwise known as "Ali," is talking about life with senior citizens, volunteering with charitable organizations, or hosting people of different cultures in her home.

While Selby may appear to possess the determination and spirit of some adults, the Norwell High School junior is only 16 years old.

Selby cares genuinely about the world around her and she proves that by staying involved in the community of Norwell where she lives and well beyond it.

Those are just some of the reasons why Selby is The Mariner's Spirit of Community winner for January.

Rosann Weeks is Selby's instructor at Dreamchasers Theatre Arts Center in Plymouth—Selby has been one of Weeks' students she was a young girl.

"Why go through life just being self-centered? What's the point?"

"I've seen her deal with people her own age, younger, and older," Weeks said of Selby. "She communicates beautifully with everyone...and she always means it."

"(Selby) is one of our best citizens," said Norwell High School vice-principal Marianne Martin. "She's a great student and a great person, and she's always willing to help out with anything. In general, if you need anything done, she does it with a smile."

Selby was overwhelmed and surprised when she learned about the award.

"It's a huge honor getting (the Spirit of Community) award," Selby said. "I definitely did not expect it—it kind of came out of the blue and really surprised me."

It didn't surprise those that know her well and the many ways she gives to others.

Selby frequently volunteers at the Boston Food Bank. She is an officer in the American Field Service club at Norwell High. She has participated in the walkathon for breast cancer for the

Norwell has the 'Blues'

Company Theatre hosts legendary group this weekend

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

It's been 32 years full of national and international club tours, theater and festival shows and 200 one-night gigs each year. Add to that a steady schedule of business between performances, travelling, rehearsing and recording and that's a lot of rooms full of blues for one band to take. But Roomful of Blues continues to do it, and willingly.

During it's three decades and various membership Roomful of Blues has released a dozen albums on several different labels. The band has spawned the careers of several individual players who have moved on to noteworthy blues/R&B acclaim in their own rights, including guitar-slingers Duke Robillard and Ronnie Earl, vocalist Sugar Ray Norcia and saxophonist Greg Piccolo.

And more recently, an impressive list of blues-based awards and accolades, including a 1998 W.C. Handy Award for Best Blues Instrumentalist (horn section), several winners and finalists spots in Downbeat Magazine's Readers and Critics Polls, previous Handy Award nominations in '96 and a Grammy nomination that same year in the Best Traditional Blues Album category for the band's disc Turn It On! Turn It Up!

Formed in Providence, RI in 1968, Roomful of Blues has become a New England blues institution, maintaining strong ties to particularly the Boston area throughout its career. The has several local stops on its touring agenda for following it's upcoming shows at Norwell's Company Theatre. Roomful of Blues will perform in Norwell both Friday and Saturday evening at 8 p.m.

"Our band has only missed maybe one or two gigs in all the years we've been together, with all of the different lineups. And even those were only because the weather was bad or maybe a band member was hurt and sidelined at the time." said ROB tenor and alto saxophonist Rich Lataille, who with Roomful's most recent personnel shift, signing on a new keyboardist, bassist and drummer late in 2000, is now the lone original member remaining with the band.

"We've always been very resilient in this way, and we've kept the band solid by getting the most well-qualified musicians we can find, players who really know the music. We've gotten some new people over the last few months who have really solidified the current band, especially the rhythm section. All of the different lineups we've had over time have been unique in their way, but this new band is one of the best in terms of playing and versatility that we've put together to date," Lataille said.

ROB's latest studio disc release is 1998's There Goes the Neighborhood, the band's eighth for the Cambridge-based Rounder Records, via the company's blues-based offshoot labels Bullseye and Varrick, since Roomful began a long-standing relationship with Rounder nearly two decades ago. The band's current live show focuses heavily on material from this disc, but it's also promoting another recent CD offering, a Rounder Heritage best-of collection titled The Blues'll Make You Happy, Too, a milestone release from Roomful covering the band's Rounder years and its timeless blend of guitar-and-horn-driven blues, R&B, roots rock 'n' roll, jump blues and swing.

"The new best-of disc is meant to be an overall view of our past. It covers stuff from all of our previous Rounder albums plus a couple of old and new unreleased cuts, and basically shows where we've been as a band and where we will continue to be going. It's also a good disc for newcomer listeners to the band who check through our catalog and might not know where to start. The whole band is happy to have this out and available," Lataille said.

Along with Lataille, the current Roomful of Blues includes vocalist Mac Odom, trumpet player Bob Enos, trombonist Ray Gennari, guitarist Chris Vachon and the newest members, keyboardist Hank Walthier, bassist Tom Enright and drummer Chris Lemp, who just a few months ago replaced previous Roomful regulars Albert Weisman, Marty Ballou and John Rossi respectively.

Current vocalist Odom has been with the group since early 1998, filling the shoes of previous singer Sugar Ray Norcia, who fronted ROB through the mid 90s and with whom the band made some of the most acclaimed music and enjoyed some of the biggest success of its career. Odom is a gritty, booming-voiced frontman most influenced perhaps by blues/R&B legend Bobby Blue Bland, unlike Norcia, whose style was more smooth and soulful.

Roomful of Blues includes: Mac Odom, Hank Walther, Chris Vachon, Bob Enos, Thom Enright, Rich Lataille, Mark Greenberg and Ray Gennari. The group will play two shows at Norwell's Company Theatre this weekend.

Lately, and rather predictably, much has been noted in the music press about the late '90s swing-blues/R&B revival of bands such as the Brian Setzer Orchestra and Big Bad Voodoo Daddy, and that Roomful had been out on the circuit jumpin', jivin' and wailin' the swing/jump-blues style for many, many years before anyone ever gave a thought to a "revival."

"We've always been a band that's played a very diverse mix of blues styles, from swing-blues to New Orleans and Chicago styles and many more in between," Lataille said. "We've always had the versatility, not just the sound. I felt that the swing revival was mostly just a fad. I was glad that it happened. It got people listening to the sort of music that we'd been playing for so long, even though some of the new bands were, in my opinion, not all that great. We were gratified about the trend, but we didn't necessarily try to capitalize on it. We made a conscious decision not to play just the kind of swing-blues sound that the new bands were doing."

Lataille promises that this pledge of musical diversity will carry on to Roomful's forthcoming studio album, which he said is hopefully due for release this spring. There is also a live disc soon to follow, recorded at a club called Barry's at the Wolftrap in Virginia over this past weekend.

past three years. She tutors her fellow students in math. She served as a youth counselor last summer at the Norwell YMCA and has plans of going back to the Y again this summer.

Selby is also an active member of her church youth group, and she manages to be a team player on both the NHS soccer and lacrosse teams. She's also run track for the school for the last two years.

Her love of acting and dream of making it a career keeps her involved in the Dreamchasers theater group.

But that's not all.

Selby's favorite community service activities have to do with interacting with people from other cultures. One of her fondest memories was when she and her family hosted a female French foreign exchange student for a year in 1999.

"To me, it's amazing to learn about different customs," Selby said. "I love meeting people from different cultures. And I don't have any sisters, so when she was living there with us, it was kind of like actually having one. And we still keep in touch."

The experience touched her so much that she broadened it through the Dreamchasers program.

For the past four years, Selby has participated in another program through Dreamchasers—hosting students from the Children's Storefront School in Harlem, N.Y. as part of that school's scholarship acting program

"These were kids from the inner city," Selby said, noting that for the past four years, she and her family have hosted two kids from Harlem each year.

"One of the kids who stayed with us (in Norwell) wouldn't sleep with the windows open because he was scared of a drive-by (shooting)," Selby said. "It's sad that some of these kids have seen such bad things. It always makes me appreciate what I have. It makes me understand that things are really not that bad. I live in Norwell. I have parents. I have a roof over my head. A lot of people take those simple things for granted. That's why I like giving back."

Selby said she constantly keeps in close touch with one of the Harlem kids she hosted three years ago named David Vega.

Another group of people Selby enjoys interacting with are senior citizens. Through Dreamchasers, Selby participates in a group called the Teen Traveling Company which holds performances at hospitals, nursing homes, and senior centers around the area.

"Some of these seniors never get any visitors," Selby said. "When they see a young person coming to visit them, the looks on their faces are priceless. It's great to know you can make these people feel good, and that's why I started doing it."

"(Selby's) maturity, wit, gentleness, and true caring for others was really evident in her (Teen Traveling Company) performances and in the conversations she shared with the members of our audiences," Weeks stated, "whether they were residents of a nursing home, patients her own age in a hospital, or senior citizens at a club meeting."

When she is not busy helping someone else, Selby enjoys spending time with friends or making plans to go to college. Currently, she's thinking about going to school in New York City. She said her dream-school is Columbia University. She wants to go to school in an urban setting so community service opportunities will be more readily available. She said she plans on majoring in business and holding a minor in theater.

Everyone who knows Selby said they are confident that she will be a successful individual.

"I had (Selby) as a student in her freshman and sophomore years," said Norwell High School English teacher JoAnne Vernacchio. "She's very bright, very articulate, very hard-working, and very outgoing. The thing that sets her apart from other kids is the fact that she is very mature and very stable. I've never seen her in a bad mood, and for an adolescent, that's quite a compliment."

"She follows through in everything she does," Weeks said. "And she does it in an extremely intelligent way. She has a tremendous love for what she's doing. It's almost infective. She's got a unique sort of energy. There's almost a purity to it. With (Selby), what you see is what you get."

"She's always had a generous heart and an outstanding work ethic," said Marina Selby, Ali's mother. "Whatever she does, she gives it 100 percent, and she really does have a deep sense of community."

"She's a focused, very determined young lady," said John Selby, Ali's father. "And she's got a natural ability to connect with people. She's like a magnet—people are just drawn to her. She was born to be a leader. I'm proud to be her Dad, but I'm also proud of the person she has become."

"Why go through life just being self-centered?," Selby said of all her community service efforts. "What's the point?"

Swedish invasion

It was those kind of historical tidbits that really got Thompson and Benson excited about putting the book together. Collecting old photos has been the other big part of the puzzle for the two.

"It's tough finding a lot of the really old pictures because so many of them have been lost," Thompson said. "But we've been really lucky in terms of finding a lot of photos. Some of them are very small, but they're very beautiful at the same time."

Benson and Thompson both agreed they've been finding some good sources for historical interviews around the area as well.

"A lot of people don't know what it was like in Brockton and beyond a long time ago," Benson said. "After the book is done, when people start looking at it, I think they'll come away with a better understanding of the contribution of the Swedish immigrants to the area. It was a major ethnic group of the area."

"By looking at the book, people will simply be able to learn about some things they might not have known about beforehand," Thompson said. "They'll also be able to look at historic photos of very-familiar sites and recall a very pleasant time in America's history. It's just a good story that more people should know about."

Potato fritatta

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

An omelette and a frittata tells one a great deal about the difference between the French and the Italians. An omelette is light and soft with a modest filling placed on top of the partially set eggs whereas a frittata is a heartier dish, whisked eggs poured on top of cooked foods in a skillet. The problem with frittatas is that they are often tough, dry, and underseasoned, a poor man's lunch. They also can be difficult to prepare since the mixture often has to be flipped in the pan which can lead to a scrambled mess. I was looking for a simple recipe for potato frittata, one that was moist, flavorful, and relatively foolproof.

The basic ingredients are eggs, Parmesan cheese, potatoes, onion, herbs salt and pepper. Checking other recipes, I found that they used anywhere from six eggs and one potato to 2 eggs and 1 1/4 pounds potatoes. Some recipe require finishing the frittata in the stove, not a bad idea but one which requires a bit of planning. I also wanted to find a technique which eliminated the precooking of the potatoes.

The first issue was the potatoes themselves. I found that thinly slicing them was preferable to cubed pieces since it made the frittata easier to flip in the pan. I tested high-starch Russets which have lots of flavor and held together nicely. Yukon Golds were also good but I did not like the waxier red potatoes since they had less flavor and had a tendency to break apart. Using two eggs and a pound and a half of potatoes, I heated a 9-inch non-stick skillet (a sticky pan is a disaster), cooking the sliced potatoes in olive oil (even a small amount of butter produced too much browning on the eggs) for about 20 minutes. I then removed the contents to a bowl which contained the whisked egg mixture, folded the contents, and then returned the frittata mixture to the pan to finish. This worked well – it was certainly simple enough – but the balance of ingredients needed adjustment.

For starters I needed less potato and more eggs. I finally settled on 5 eggs to one pound of potato which also fits nicely into a 9-inch skillet. As for the Parmesan which is whisked with the eggs, I increased the quantity from 1/4 to 1/3 cup. The addition of herbs and onion is nice but definitely optional.

I also wondered about flipping the frittata. Some recipes suggest using a pancake turner – I found this less than satisfactory. Placing the mixture in an oven is actually a very good idea but, for such a simple, last-minute dish, this option requires a bit too much forethought. I decided therefore to simply use a plate with a slightly smaller diameter than the skillet. It worked like a charm.

This recipe can also be adapted to other ingredients such as asparagus. See recipe below.

EASY POTATO FRITATTA

A non-stick 9-inch skillet is important for t
gest trying t pound of a
potatoes. Roast, grill, or broil trimmed, lightly oiled asparagus (you can also grill the asparagus) until just cooked and then proceed with step 2. This recipe is great for a simple lunch or supper served with a salad.

3 tablespoons olive oil

1 pound Russet, Yukon Gold or other high or medium starch potatoes of your choice, cut in half and then cut into 1/4 inch slices

1 small or 1/2 medium onion cut in half pole to pole and cut into thin slices (optional)

Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

1 tablespoon freshly minced herbs such as parsley, chives, thyme or tarragon

5 large eggs

1/3 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese

1. Heat a 9-inch non-stick skillet over medium-high heat. When hot add 2 tablespoons olive oil and the potatoes and optional onion and toss to coat. Season liberally with salt and pepper. Cook, stirring often, until cooked through about 20 minutes.

2. Meanwhile, whisk the eggs, Parmesan cheese and optional herbs in a medium bowl. Add the cooked potato/onion mixture to the bowl and fold to combine. Season to taste with a bit of salt and freshly ground pepper. Place the same skillet over medium heat and add the remaining 1 tablespoon olive oil. Add the contents of the bowl and let cook without stirring for about 4 minutes or until the bottom is set and lightly browned. Place a plate over the frittata (one that fits into the rim of the skillet works best) and turn the frittata onto the plate. Slide the frittata back into the skillet and cook for about 4 minutes more or until the frittata is slightly puffy and cooked through and the bottom is lightly browned. You may poke into it with a fork to check for doneness. If additional cooking is needed adjust the heat to low and flip the frittata again in the same manner as before, cooking for an additional 2-3 minutes. Serve hot or room temperature. Serves 4-6 as a side dish.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 24

The new moon culminates at 8:07 a.m., 4 1/2-degrees of Aquarius. Generally the light side of a new moon is an ideal time for launching new activities. However, there are a few planetary alignments that warn against making important decisions or signing contracts. There are likely to be delays or unexpected obstacles; you may not have all the facts. Today the Aquarius moon interacts with Neptune at 11:21 a.m. The planet Saturn, standing at 24-degrees of Taurus, begins direct travel at 7:24 p.m.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25

Planetary action runs high. Gear up for a challenging day. The giant planet Jupiter begins to travel in direct motion at 3:38 a.m., 1-degree Gemini. The moon continues its travel in Aquarius and interacts with Mars/Uranus in the afternoon and Saturn in the evening. Give others lots of freedom and space. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Saturn warns against signing important contracts, making new commitments or important decisions. The sun and Neptune conjoin at 6-degrees of Aquarius at 10:56 p.m. Get extra rest tonight.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26

Potentially difficult planetary influences continue. Take it slow and easy. At 12:28 a.m. the Aquarius moon interacts with Mercury and becomes inactive. A Pisces moon takes over at 11:39 a.m., and forms a 90-degree contact to Jupiter at 2:03 p.m. Don't overdo, overindulge on any level. People may be hypersensitive. Choose your words carefully. Mars prepares to form a 90-degree alignment to Uranus, warning you to use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Avoid taking chances or doing anything risky. On the other hand, this Mars/Uranus combined with an applying Venus/Saturn alignment may spark romantic fires this evening.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27

This is a great weekend to kick back, rest and recharge your batteries. The moon travels in Pisces, setting a laidback mood. However, there is one rough spot between 3:01-6:01 p.m. today, when the moon aligns with Pluto. Be more sensitive to the needs of others; be more tolerant of their shortcomings and forgiving of past transgressions. The evening is prime for attending a concert or movie.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28

Take a vacation from stress and worry; treat yourself to a day of leisure. Today's influences bring a calm respite in an astrological stormy period. The moon travels in easygoing Pisces, forming harmonious contacts to Mars, Saturn and Venus until 2:48 p.m., when it becomes inactive. The moon enters the first sign of the zodiac, Aries, at 11:35 p.m.

MONDAY, JANUARY 29

The planet Mercury is beginning to slow its rates of motion and will start retrograde travel on Saturday, February 3. That means that this can be a topsy-turvy week. It's a good idea to allow extra time to get where you are going or to have an alternate plan of action. Mechanical or electrical breakdowns are likely. Projects may take unexpected turns. The moon travels in Aries today and tomorrow. Don't jump into things or act on impulse. Take it slow and easy.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30

Today's planetary influences are similar to yesterday's. The moon continues its travel in fiery Aries. Others may be irritable, impatient, argumentative. Don't rock the boat in business or romance. Channel high energy constructively. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion. You can be most productive. Get back on track with exercise routines.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31

Planetary influences turn around completely today, when the moon moves from fiery Aries to earthy Taurus. At 8:36 a.m. the Aries moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive until 9:21 a.m., when it enters Taurus. Zero in on projects that have been left hanging and finish them; handle routine chores, errands. A lunar alignment to Neptune makes this an evening to relax and unwind.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1

Mercury travels in retrograde motion during the month of February, making it a time for a change of pace and priorities. Rather than launching new ventures, plan to finish projects already begun; review, redo, repair. Artistic projects as well as jobs that require research or study also get the green light. Today Mercury moves into Pisces at 2:13 a.m. Mercury is slowing its rate of motion and will actually turn retrograde Saturday, February 3. The moon continues its travel in Taurus, prompting you to stay busy with practical projects. You can be most productive.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2

Astrological storm warnings are in effect today and throughout the weekend. Take it slow and easy. The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 5:31 a.m. The planet Venus moves into Aries at 2:14 p.m., remaining there until June 6. The moon enters Gemini at 3:56 p.m. and aligns with Jupiter at 6:14 p.m. Forget your troubles; relax and unwind this evening.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3

The sun forms a flowing 60-degree contact to Pluto at 8:06 a.m. This morning is prime for starting new diets, exercise regimens or programs to break bad habits. A polarity of Mars/Saturn also affects the day. Rather than trying to change others and transform external situations, this is a time to look within, change your thinking and find a new course of action for yourself. At 8:58 p.m. Mercury, standing at 1-degree Pisces, begins retrograde travel until February 25. A harmonious alignment of Venus/Jupiter highlights social and romantic activities this evening.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 4

The Gemini moon aligns with Uranus at 3:12 a.m. and becomes inactive until 7:00 p.m. If you have work projects to accomplish, handle a variety of tasks rather than one job. It may be difficult to focus and easy to overlook important details. This day is best, however, for relaxing and enjoying favorite sports, hobbies, friends. The moon enters domestic Cancer at 7:00 p.m., aligning with Mercury at 8:00 p.m. and Venus at 10:16 p.m. Share a special dinner with close friends/family.

Mortgage holder can pursue its share of interest in property

Anthony Summers

You never know how watertight your contract is as long as all parties remain happy. But when priorities change and push comes to shove, your so-called set-in-cement contract may very well spring a leak.

It was one of those leaky agreements which both caused and effected the outcome of the Land Court case of Fleet Finance vs. Patricia and John Sammarco.

Background

On June 29, 1973, John and Patricia Sammarco purchased the home at 140 High St., Milford. They took title as tenants by the entirety, husband and wife. The home was purchased with a first mortgage loan from the Milford Savings Bank (MSB) which was signed by both John and Patricia Sammarco. Ten years passed and in 1983, they both signed a second mortgage for $10,000 and used the money to construct a swimming pool.

But trouble was brewing in 1990 when the surprised Patricia Sammarco received a loan approval letter from Advanced Financial Services (AFS). When she questioned her husband, he dismissed her inquiry by telling her not to worry and that it was none of her business. On Feb. 9, 1990, John Sammarco signed a $74,000 note, mortgage, and incidental loan documents. All loan documents also bore a signature purported to be Patricia Sammarco's. In addition, a Rhode Island notary public notarized both signatures.

After all closing costs and prior mortgages were paid, $58,243.75 remained, which was paid to Patricia and John Sammarco in the form of a check that was cashed. The note and mortgage was eventually sold to the unsuspecting Fleet bank, the plaintiff in this action.

In 1992, the couple threw in the towel and filed a petition for divorce alleging irretrievable breakdown. Part of the settlement agreement required John Sammarco to convey the house to his wife for a price of $35,000. He also agreed to assume full responsibility to pay the $74,000 second mortgage.

After the divorce, things went downhill for John Sammarco as he was disbarred from the practice of law and jailed for embezzlement. Finally, in 1995, he stopped paying the AFS mortgage. On Nov. 17, 1995, Patricia Sammarco notified Fleet that she never signed or authorized anyone to sign the AFS loan documents. With her former husband in jail

Historically, however, sales in the third quarter of 2000 remained quite high, with the 16,256 residential sales recorded this year ranking fourth all-time, exceeded only by the third quarters of 1997-99.

"Previously, over the past three years, we've satisfied a record level of buyer demand, so the current level of activity now marks a return to a more normal market," Meyer said.

"In most regions, we continue to see a fairly steady flow of traffic, especially from high-end buyers and first-time buyers looking for relief from today's escalating rents. However, some buyers are also being more cautious as they enter the market, not wanting to overextend themselves."

Regionally, in the third quarter, sales of detached single-family homes declined in all seven regions of the state, with the most modest decreases occurring in the greater Boston and Northeast regions, where sales dropped 6.6. percent and 7.6 percent respectively from the same period in 1999.

Elsewhere, sales fell 10-12 percent in the central, west, and South Shore regions, and 15-16 percent on Cape Cod and in southeastern Massachusetts.

Real estate experts have attributed the decline to a lack of inventory in those areas.

Conway presents appreciation awards

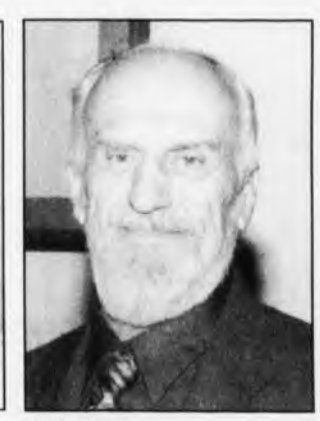
Jack Conway & Co. recently honored the following sales agents with the realty firm's "Thanksgiving Award" for their outstanding performance during 2000.

Chairman Jack Conway and President Richard F. Cahill presented the awards at the company's annual Thanksgiving breakfast, held in November at Plimoth Plantation. Winners from each office received a holiday turkey in recognition of their efforts throughout the year.

"What makes the Thanksgiving award so special is that the winners are chosen by their colleagues," Conway said. "Each office's sales team selects the person they feel best represents the Conway spirit of cooperation, helpfulness and goodwill."

As part of the event, Conway associates and employees collected nearly $1,000 worth of canned food and other non-perishable goods to benefit Mainspring House, a homeless shelter operated by the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless.

Founded in 1957, Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. has more than 600 agents in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.



The winners for the South Shore region include Donna Flanagan of Abington, Dave Wood of Bridgewater; Dee Vincent of Brockton; Rosemary Kelleher of Canton; Arlene Bower of Cohasset; Gary Trechok of Duxbury; Eileen Cook of Hanover; Gail Fusco of Hanson; Peter Brown of Hingham; Michelle Charles of Hull; Susan Gray of Marshfield; Harry Williams of Milton; Bill Bliss of Norwell; Gary Mason of Pembroke; Jennifer Churchill of Plymouth; Gloria Skolnick of Quincy; Maureen Barry of Scituate; Sam Corbitt of Wareham; Frank Rybak of Weymouth; Doug Crane of Whitman; Bernie Kellogg of Commercial Division, and Stephanie Corkery of Conway Financial Services.

Mortgage holder can pursue its share of interest in property

and judgment proof and Patricia Sammarco's denial that she signed the mortgage, Fleet filed a complaint seeking a clarification of its rights with respect to the mortgage.

Discussion of law

Even though Patricia Sammarco might be able to prove that she never signed the mortgage, Fleet argued that the mortgage should be validated based on an equitable mortgage theory which would make the mortgage enforceable, the theory being that even if Patricia Sammarco did not sign the mortgage, it was unfair for her to escape liability given the fact that she knew about the mortgage as of 1990 but never denied signing until 1995.

In order to equitably stop Patricia from denying liability, Fleet must prove (a) conduct by Patricia Sammarco intended to induce AFS to make the $74,000 loan (b) the actual completion of the loan was induced by her conduct and (c) detriment to such person (failure to repay the loan to Fleet) as a consequence of her conduct.

Decision

Fleet has failed to prove the elements necessary to establish an equitable mortgage against Patricia Sammarco. After all, it was John Sammarco, not she who applied to AFS for the loan. She never did anything to induce AFS to make the loan. Any of her conduct in not raising the issue of forgery, occurred long after AFS made the loan, and therefore did not induce or deceive AFS to make the loan.

At the time the mortgage was made in 1990 John and Patricia Sammarco owned the home as tenants by the entirety which gave each party the right of survivorship.

However, in 1992, the divorce changed the form of ownership to tenants in common. When John Sammarco transferred his interest to Patricia Sammarco, his interest was transferred subject to the AFS mortgage. What we have here is a mortgage covering John Sammarco's undivided one-half interest in the home.

Legal advice

In order for the bank to move forward to collect on its loan, it would have to foreclose on the lien it had in John Sammarco's interest. Whoever purchased his interest at the foreclosure sale would become a tenant in common with Patricia Sammarco. The high bidder at foreclosure, possibly Fleet, could then file a petition to partition seeking an order that the property be sold and the proceeds be divided between Patricia Sammarco and the high bidder.

A small thing like the omission of a simple signature can have far reaching and disastrous consequences. George Herbert said it 400 years ago. "For want of a nail the shoe is lost, for want of a shoe the horse is lost, for want of a horse the rider is lost."

Which of These Costly Homeseller Mistakes Will You Make When You Sell Your Home?

A new report has just been released which reveals 10 costly mistakes that most homeowners make when selling their home, and a system that can help you sell your home fast and for the most amount of money.

This industry report shows clearly how the traditional ways of selling homes have become increasingly less and less effective in today's market. The fact of the matter is that fully three quarters of homesellers don't get what they want for their home and become disillusioned and - worse - financially disadvantaged when they put their home on the market.

As this report uncovers, most homesellers make 10 deadly mistakes that cost them literally thousands of dollars. The good news is that each and every one of these mistakes is entirely preventable.

In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "The System to Get Your Home Sold Fast and For Top Dollar."

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your free copy of this report, call 1-800-581-1081 and enter ID#12085. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

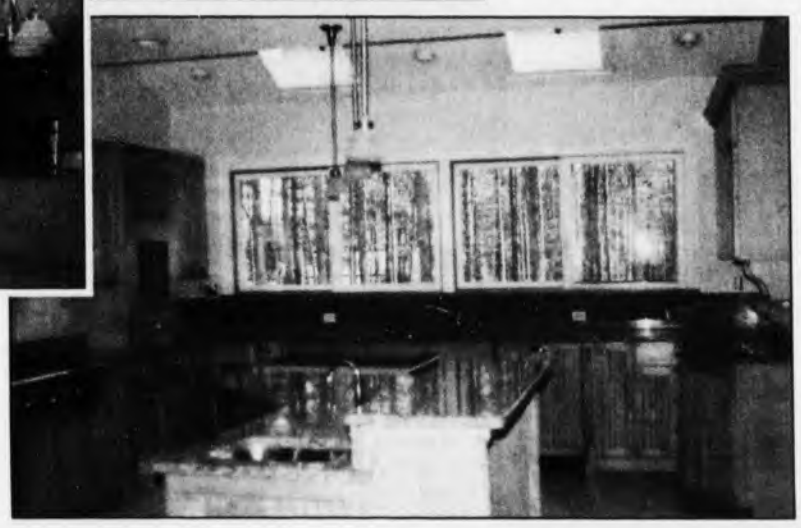
CENTURY 21 ANNEX broker owners take pleasure in presenting their annual SALESPERSON OF THE YEAR award to SCOTT RADWIN.

Scott has been a member of our sales team for four years and continues to outpace his past accomplishments. Scott will be feted at the March Gold Ball in Boston as one of the premier producers in the CENTURY 21 SYSTEM. We hope all of Scott's previous clients and customers will offer him their congratulations and continue to use his services.

Prime Real Estate

Palatial Colonial



This beautiful palatial Colonial combines style and elegance with all the amenities required with a home of this quality. Both the living and dining rooms have hardwood floors, a Waterford crystal chandelier graces the tres ceiling in the dining room. A state-of-the art custom kitchen featuring subzero appliances, granite and ceramic tile floor opens into a cathedral-ceiling family room, which steps up to a four-season, sun-drenched room. The library is also located on this floor.

Two custom-crafted staircases lead to the second floor where three full baths and four bedrooms await you and include a breathtaking master suite that will appeal to the most discriminating buyer. A beautiful, professionally landscaped two-acre lot is home to this amazing, 10-room, custom-built, three-car attached-garage home and the list goes on.

This is a must to see, come preview Sunday, Jan. 28, from 1 to 3 p.m.

IN BRIEF

Lois Baho, second from left, and Marian Blackwell, who manages the Duxbury office, are shown with Jack Conway, right.

Blackwell, Baho receive Extra Mile Award

Michael Coletta

Two real estate sales agents recently were honored for going the "extra mile" to help customers buy and sell homes in Conway Country.

Marian Blackwell, who manages the Duxbury office, and Lois Baho, an agent in the West Roxbury sales center, received a certificate and a plaque from Chairman Jack Conway during the company's annual Thanksgiving award ceremony.

Blackwell was honored for helping the Campbell family of Pembroke buy their new home on Oldham Street, even after their builder faced foreclosure prior to finishing the work. At Blackwell's request, Conway stepped in and bid on the house at auction, then completed the construction job with its own crew.

Crescent announced top brokers

Jeannie Carr

Crescent Realty Group recently celebrated the announcement of its top brokers for the year 2000 at a celebration luncheon at Papa Razzi's in Hanover. Michael Coletta was the recipient of the Broker of the Year award for volume. Jeannie Carr was honored for having the most number of transactions.

Michael Richardson, president, began the presentations by acknowledging the dedication of all Crescent's associates. "It has been a most remarkable year," commented Richardson. "We are an independent agency competing with corporate giants and we continue to succeed and continue to grow."

Save the Last Dance (C+)

Hollywood and TV (now increasingly indistinguishable) have little sense of how to deal with matters of race. Perhaps in expiation of decades of unflattering, even vile, stereotypes, movies and TV shows tend either to portray blacks in elevated positions (is there a world leader whom James Earl Jones or Morgan Freeman hasn't played?, a judicial system not chockfull of black, preferably female, jurists?, a non-black FBI director?) or to succumb to the odd idea that "authenticity" equates to street, genuine blackness to hip hop.

For mainstream consumption, reality flies away. Consider Fox's hyperactive Monday offering, "Boston Public," which has concocted an ordinary high school, not one of the exam schools, half of whose students are white — in actuality, fewer than eight percent of the non-exam high school student body in Boston is white — the better to draw a white audience, which routinely rejects TV shows with casts that are predominantly black. In this TV fantasy, the teachers have the problems, like a fondness for sleeping with students, and other no-nos.

"Save the Last Dance" is more honest. Its urban Chicago high school is overwhelmingly black, as in big cities they tend to be, whites having scooted away for less troubled pastures. Our heroine, Sara (Julia Stiles), a suburban white girl who has just lost her mother, is somehow obliged to move to the city to live with her father (Terry Kinney), who for some reason lives in a black neighborhood, maybe because he plays the horn and wants to find "roots." In this school, there is only one teacher, it seems, onscreen for three minutes; after that, the kids spend their lives dancing exuberantly at a black club where underage drinking seems to be no problem, arguing about whether it's appropriate for a white girl to date a black boy, or heading excitedly off to face their fate in street warfare.

The black boy in question, Derek (Sean Patrick Thomas), the brother of Sara's new best friend (a single mother, with a ne'er-do-well boyfriend), was the boyfriend of snaky Nikki (Bianca Lawson), who's angered that Derek would rather be with Sara than with a sistuh. All of this is by-the-book of black empowerment, embodying also what Stephen Holden of the New York Times referred to as the "Perfect Negro" image: He who solves the problems of whites, as in 'The Green Mile," "Bagger Vance" and such. Derek restores Sara's will to dance, bestowing upon her rhythm and verve, a little bit o' soul. Until Derek unlocks Sara's dormant talents, she is frozen, unfulfilled. The romance is unconsummated, onscreen, but hope-filled: They are sweet and deserve each other, though of course Derek (just accepted to Georgetown) speaks illiterately, else, by the idiotic dictates of today's cinema, he wouldn't be a full-fledged boy in the 'hood. By showing us three minutes of classical ballet, the movie juxtaposes what has passed the test of time with what is considered dance and music in our careless era, unintentionally highlighting the differences, not to hip hop's advantage.

Rule 240 issued on request

George Hobica

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. We are interested in your discussion of Rule 240. From the way you described it, we assume that all U.S. airlines have a Rule 240 dealing with the same subject matter, but that each airline sets forth its own policies. It would seem desirable for travelers to obtain copies of this rule as adopted by airlines which they frequently fly.

Do you agree and, if so, can you suggest the easiest way of obtaining such copies?

A. Yes, it's a good idea to obtain a copy of the contract of carriage, including Rule 240, for all airlines you fly regularly. Airlines are supposed to provide you with a complete, not abbreviated, copy on request and can be fined for not doing so. But, usually, they'll just try to give you a shorthand version, or they won't know what you're talking about. Be persistent.

One method is by writing to the customer service department of your airline and specify that you want a copy of the entire contract, including Rule 240 language. If you have Internet access, you may be able to find a copy online (see below).

It's true that airlines have slightly different language in their Rule 240s, and not all domestic airlines include Rule 240 at all (but most major ones do). Foreign carriers don't have a Rule 240 in their contracts.

As I said before, you can also look at a useful Web site that summarizes airline rules at www.1travel.com (click on the "Rules of the Air" button). This isn't an official site, but it is accurate.

Some airlines also have contracts on their Web sites. American Airlines has a section on its site (www.aa.com) titled "Conditions of Carriage," but it's not the entire contract and doesn't mention Rule 240. Delta, too, has a summary, but not the official document. United's site (www.ual.com), in contrast, includes the complete contract, which includes a summary of Rule 240, as do Continental's (www.continental.com) and Northwest's (www.nwa.com) sites.

To find United's, click on "About United" and then "Our Commitment" and then "Contract of Carriage." You can then download the entire contract and print it out.

In fact, since United, Northwest and Continental make it so easy to get the full contract, people who fly these airlines often, have access to the Web, and don't carry at least the Rule 240 part of the contracts whenever they fly are making life harder than it needs to be.

Q. I recently returned from Christmas vacation, flying on Delta. When we left, it was raining heavily and apparently our luggage was left out in the rain unprotected. When we unpacked we found almost everything in our luggage was soaked, including all our clothing as well as new Christmas gifts. I had also packed a number of photographs dating back almost 100 years that narrowly escaped damage because I had packed them in bubble wrap.

I think I am entitled to some compensation from Delta for all of the dry-cleaning costs incurred if nothing else.

Can you please tell me how to file a claim and what would be reasonable compensation? I had planned to submit my baggage claim tickets — one of which is badly smeared — and an itemized dry-cleaning ticket. Is there anything else I should do?

A. First, it's a really bad idea to pack anything valuable or irreplaceable in your checked luggage. It amazes me that people do this. Always carry items like these on board with you. But that's for next time.

U.S. airlines are now required to compensate passengers for up to $2,500 in lost or damaged luggage. You're clearly entitled to compensation, although it may be hard to prove that Delta caused the damage since you didn't make a claim before leaving the airport.

At this point, you should write Delta, enclosing copies of your tickets, boarding passes, and baggage claim checks, along with your receipts for expenses incurred. The address: Delta AirLines, P.O. Box 20980, Atlanta, GA 30320-2980.

Follow up:

In the continuing saga of the passengers who bought $3,200 worth of tickets with their credit card on now-bankrupt Air Aruba and put the charges in dispute. After reading my reply to their plight, they called Chase Bank, their Visa card issuer, again. (Readers may remember that originally they were told that unless Chase could collect funds from Air Aruba they would expect these passengers to pay their bill in full.) Here's what the passengers learned:

"We asked what the next step was in our dispute process and what we should expect as a final resolution. (The Chase representative) indicated that once the dispute is finalized, whatever the outcome, our account will likely be permanently credited. He said that they generally handle it that way, because they want their customers to continue charging purchases on their credit card, without fearing that they'd lose their money. I asked what "generally" meant and he said "it means better than 90 percent of the time."

Well, in fact, the reason why Chase and other issuers handle it this way is because federal law requires it to be handled this way. The Federal Fair Credit Billing Act, as I've said in previous columns, mandates that credit card issuers refund a consumer's money if he or she doesn't receive something they've charged to their credit card and dispute the charge within 60 days.

I find it amazing that the Chase representative made it sound like this was some sort of customer relations gesture. It's not! It's the law. The lesson here: Know your rights and be persistent.

Witness the magic of growth from seeds

By Suzanne Mahler
Part 1

As howling winds and swirling, drifting snow gave way to crystal clear blue skies, I ventured forth, my camera in hand, to document the beauty of our winter wonderland. Few events in nature rival the serenity and pristine elegance of a new fallen snow when even an average landscape can be transformed into a picture postcard. On this perfect winter afternoon in mid-January, spring seemed light years away, but even for gardeners who yearn for the greening of the landscape, the peaceful solitude of the storm's aftermath was undeniably mesmerizing.

With muscles aching from hours of shoveling, I paused periodically to observe the change in patterns cast by the elegant forms and distinctive lines of the winter landscape as the light shifted throughout the afternoon. The slanted rays of the setting sun illuminated a rustling clump of ornamental grasses as long shadows created intricate designs on the glistening, crystalline surface of the new fallen snow. A small flock of robins, perched high above, seemed out of place in this wintry scene, their occasional calls to one another sounding like protests to Mother Nature's for her most recent chilly offering.

Dusk and falling temperatures compelled me to retreat to the warmth and comfort of my home. During my hours out-of-doors, my mind wandered, envisioning the beauty of the spring landscape nestled beneath the fluffy, white blanket of snow. Eager to preserve these visions of flowers and greenery, I sought refuge in my stacks of gardening catalogs, their colorful offerings providing just the needed touch of summertime splendor.

One of the most economical ways to produce a garden full of beautiful flowers is to grow your own plants from seeds. Quantities of annuals, perennials and vegetables can be raised from seed packets at a fraction of the cost of buying flats or individual plants. There is also a tremendous sense of pride and accomplishment when you successfully grow plants from seed. Gardeners of all ages experience an unexplainable thrill when they discover that leaves have sprouted from the seeds they have been sown. The magic of a tiny seed germinating and growing to produce a clump of exquisite flowers, a vine covered with delicious, plump tomatoes, or a stately evergreen tree, is one of nature's greatest miracles.

Another advantage to starting your own seeds is the fantastic diversity available from seed sources. While many local nurseries offer a wide selection of plants and seeds, the possibilities from seed catalogs are infinite. Raising plants from seeds enables the gardener to select the colors, attributes and varieties best suited to their needs rather than being limited to those offered as transplants later in the season at local nurseries.

The month of January is an ideal time to begin the process of gathering seeds and supplies. Seeds, containers and growing medium can be bought locally or through catalogs. Perhaps the most difficult task will be selecting which types and varieties of seeds to purchase with so many enticing descriptions and photographs offered by the seed companies. A good reference book on seed starting is highly recommended, as well. Although most packets provide pertinent information on how to treat the seeds contained within the package, a complete reference will assist you in making your selections and provide many details which simply cannot fit on the back of a small seed envelope.

There are several excellent sources for seed packets. Park Seed Company has been my primary choice for years as I am partial to their foil seed packages which seem to help the seeds remain viable for a longer period. Another great supplier is Johnny's Selected Seeds located in Maine. They test all their seeds in that locale, so the varieties they offer tend to be especially well suited to our area. Burpee Company is a well known source with extensive listings and many of their seed packets can be purchased through local nurseries. Most commercial catalogs have web sites if you wish to browse their offerings on-line.

Should you have seeds from previous years, they should be tested now for their viability. Most seeds remain viable for a number of years if stored in a cool, dry environment, but some types last better than others. Airtight containers, plastic bags or canisters are ideal for storage. Place a number of stored seeds between damp layers of paper towels and keep in a warm location consistently above 70 degrees. Keep the toweling damp but not soggy and start checking the seeds in a few days for up to three weeks. If none or only a very small percentage of the seeds germinate, fresh seeds should be purchased.

While it is wise to begin planning and preparing for seed starting now, be sure to wait a few weeks before starting most seeds. Limited sunlight and short day length often leads to leggy, spindly seedlings. Supplemental light can be supplied but little will be gained by beginning the germination process too early. For now, be content to research, purchase and dream of your upcoming bounty of healthy, stocky seedlings and the rewards they will produce through the spring and summer months. Seed sources: Park Seed Co., 1 Parkton Ave., Greenwood, SC 29647-0001; W. Atlee Burpee & Co., 300 Park Ave., Warminster, PA 18991-0001; Johnny's Selected Seeds, 1839 Foss Hill Rd., RR1, Box 2580, Albion ME 04910-9731.

Selectmen put off signing train pact

Resident concerns send town back to negotiating table

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

"Historically, the town has been divided right down the middle. We're not getting an overwhelming mandate to stop the train."
— Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan

Anti-Greenbush residents got a bit of a reprieve Tuesday night when the town put off signing a mitigation agreement with the MBTA, and said it will try to head back to the negotiating table. However, selectmen said the town will eventually sign a deal, in order to make sure the town is protected when the train does come.

"People think we have the ability to stop the train by not signing an agreement," said Selectman Fred Koed, "but that's not true."

In fact, said Selectman Michael Sullivan, the sooner the town signs, the better off it will be.

"If we can get this agreement in the draft Environmental Impact Report [the train has to file with the Department of Environmental Protection], it becomes more binding," an assertion backed by both MBTA Senior Project Consultant Kevin Dasey, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley.

Highlights of the agreement include up to $1.2 million reimbursement for the James Brook flood control project in the village and harbor areas; $1 million in exchange for a "friendly" land taking of the town-owned right-of-way; median strips at all grade crossings; a bridge from North Main Street, over the tracks, to Rocky Lane; and crucial MBTA support for a $1 million Public Works Economic Development grant.

But several of the nearly 100 residents that packed themselves into the selectmen's office for the three-hour public hearing said the deal wasn't strong enough, and some suggested the town sign no agreement at all.

"What should the town accept in order to make this irreversible change?" asked Arrowood Street resident Michael Dick. He argued that the mitigation package on the

Train forum Tuesday

A meeting to discuss proposed noise and vibration mitigation treatments for individual properties between Greenbush right-of-way abutters and MBTA officials has been scheduled for Tuesday from 3-8 p.m. in the Town Hall Auditorium.

The meeting was requested by selectmen and residents at this past Tuesday's public hearing on the proposed mitigation agreement between Cohasset and the MBTA. Though the agreement outlines a number of mitigation items for the town — abutters were concerned about mitigation for their individual properties.

According to MBTA officials, properties within a certain distance of the tracks are evaluated on an individual basis as to what their needs are. They said distance from the tracks, soil conditions, and any other factor is taken into consideration.

Senior Project Coordinator Kevin Dasey said the MBTA follows a formula established by the Federal Transit Authority in figuring out whether a house or building qualifies for things such as sound-proofing or vibration mats.

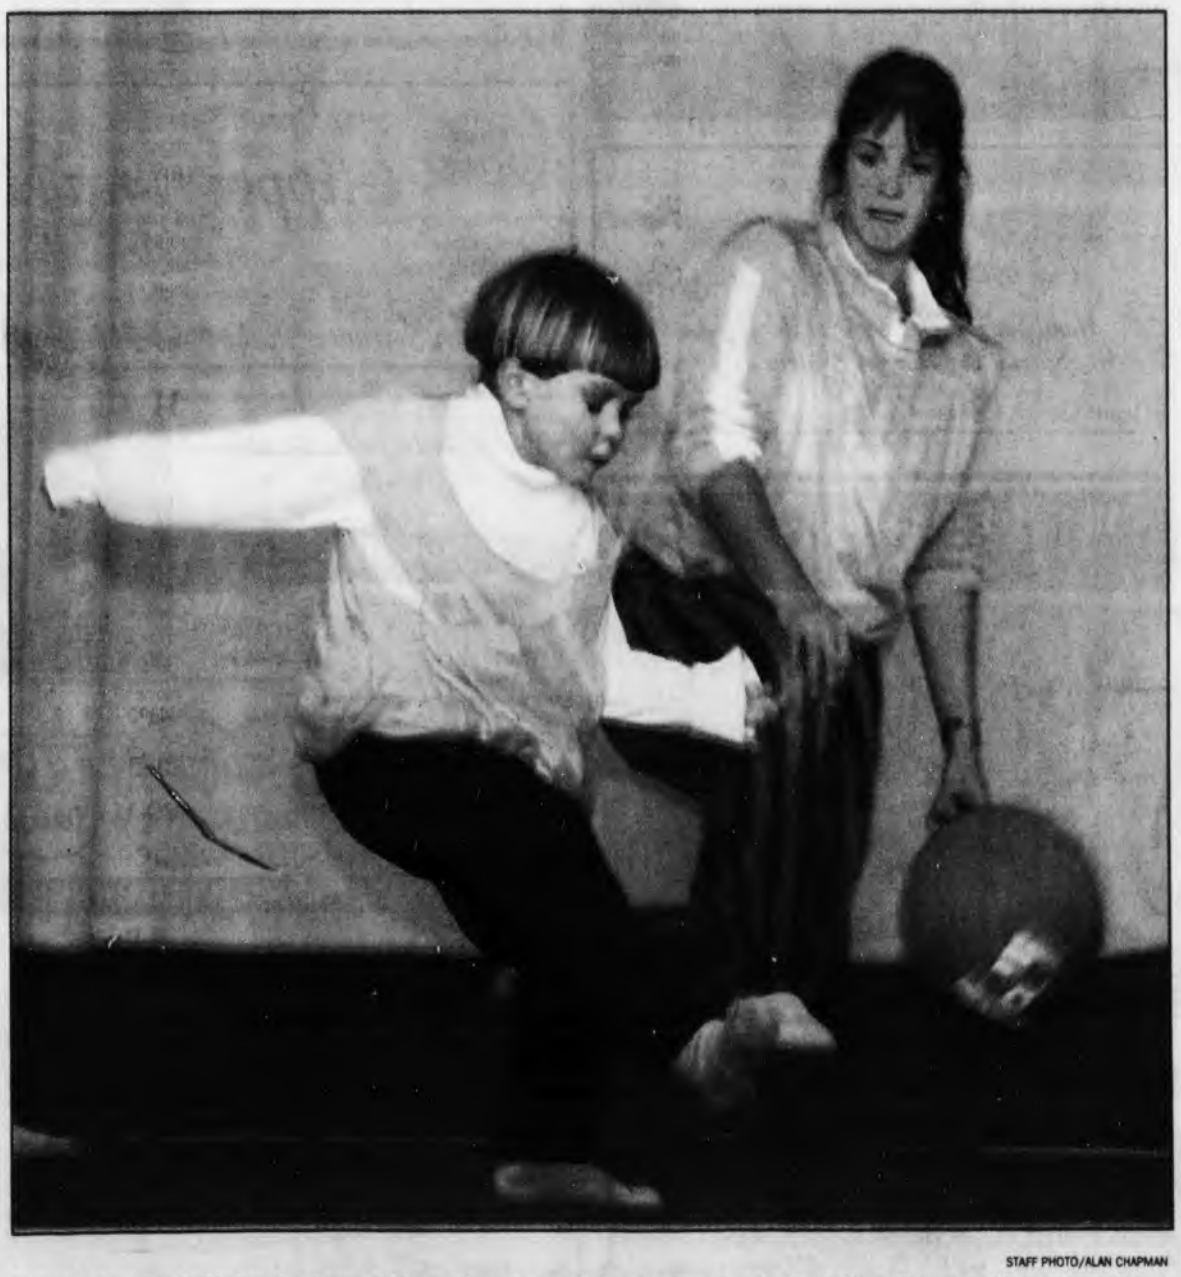
Lawyer to lead business group

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

New Cohasset Chamber of Commerce president Kimberly La Torraca and her predecessor, David Drinkwater do have a few things in common. Both are Scituate residents, both are involved in real estate, and have offices next to each other in a Route 3A office building. La Torraca is a real estate lawyer, Drinkwater is a real estate broker.



"She demonstrated strong abilities to work well with people and is a very good consensus builder."
— David Drinkwater, past president

But, more importantly in the eyes of the Cohasset chamber, La Torraca and Drinkwater are both involved with small businesses.

La Torraca officially took over the chamber presidency last Thursday at the organization's annual dinner, held in the Case made for more animal control hours

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy's job isn't just about making sure Rover's dog license has been renewed, or getting Mittens the cat out of a tree anymore.

Now it's about coyotes and foxes and possums and raccoons and skunks and the occasional tropical virus, such as the West Nile virus that spread throughout the South Shore via mosquitoes last summer and turned up in dead crows.

The job for Murphy has changed over the past two years, to the point now where 20 hours a week is not enough time to do the job properly.

"People do not want to hear that they should be patient. They insist on immediate service, which is impossible with limited hours."
— Police chief Brian Noonan

In 2000, the police department received 1,150 calls requesting service from Murphy, an increase of 250 calls over 1999. Concerns over the West Nile Virus alone

A new look to paper's website

Townonline.com, the web site of Community Newspaper Company, was unveiled with a new look and features this week, making it faster and easier for Internet users to find local news, information and shopping close to home.

The new look incorporates the best of the past with additional features and functionality to improve the site. The most significant change is a new, more simply designed gateway page and universal navigation throughout the site. The simplified navigation allows users to easily find the information they're looking for. Some of the new features of the site include comprehensive community resource information about 200 towns in Eastern Massachusetts, online ticketing, personal and family web sites, and a new Tuesday chat series called, "Talk of the Town."

"The expansion of Town Online is one more step toward our company's mission of building community, both in print and online," said Kirk Davis, CNC president. "We want to relate to the people in each of our communities in a way that is as unique as the city or town in which they live. We're allowing and encouraging people to interact with their community. That's grass roots journalism at its best."

The redesign was contracted to New Tilt, a Boston-based company specializing in web strategy, information architecture and experience design.

"We are thrilled to bring this new generation of Town Online to our increased the workload by 150 calls and state health officials expect a large increase in cases in 2001. The West Nile Virus is blamed for a number of deaths across the Northeast over the past two summers. Whenever a dead crow was found, Murphy would have to go get it, and send it to the state for testing.

"We get an overwhelming amount of calls," he said. "I can't do it in 20 hours…I have to pick and choose what I do."

As a result, Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan has asked the town manager for an increase of five hours to allow Murphy to spend more time dealing with the calls.

"I think its more than justified, he gives up a lot of his own time," Noonan said.

However, the request could face a fight. Last week, Selectman Merle Brown fired the first salvo against the increase saying he'd rather see the money used for overtime for full-time police officers.

But Murphy insists that town residents would be better off if he could give more hours. "I'm not saying the town needs a full-time officer, though it certainly would be nice," Murphy said, "But if they expanded the services I could do a lot more."

Murphy said, by state statute, his main job is to make sure every dog in Cohasset is licensed, tagged and been vaccinated, "everything else is secondary."

However, public safety concerns have caused him to reevaluate his priorities, and he suggests the town needs to do the same. "Dogs and kitties up a tree are my last priority," he said. "Wildlife is the biggest problem."

Coyote and fox calls take up 30 percent of Murphy's time.

Noonan said residents don't understand the time limitations of the job.

"Residents find it hard to accept wildlife on their property in close proximity to their children and pets…People do not want to hear that they should be patient," Noonan stated in a memo to Town Manager Mark Haddad. "They insist on immediate service, which is impossible with limited hours."

Noonan said Murphy usually puts in a couple of extra hours of uncompensated service every week, and spends a lot of time tracking coyotes. "He spends a lot of time tracking them around town, tracking their locations, trying to find out where their dens are," Noonan explained.

He added that regular patrolmen aren't qualified to pick up the slack. "My people aren't qualified to do animal control calls. They can respond to emergencies, but they can't give out information or take action as he does," Noonan said.

Murphy, who has been a certified animal control officer for 25 years, makes $12.23 an hour. Hull, Scituate and Hingham all have full-time animal control officers. The Scituate officer is paid $30,429 a year. In Hingham, the animal control officer makes $20.29 an hour for 35 hours a week or about $37,000 an year.

Haddad said the additional five hours are still in the proposed Fiscal Year 2002 budget which starts July 1. Selectmen have not finalized the budget yet, he said.

This week in COHASSET

Grant hearing

The Cohasset Board of Selectman will hold a public hearing Tuesday, Feb. 6, at 8:15 p.m. on a proposed Public Works Economic Development Grant (PWED). The PWED program funds infrastructure improvements that strengthen the local economic climate while creating or retaining jobs. The proposed grant application includes upgrades to the municipal parking lot and select railroad crossings, in addition to other village streetscape improvements.

Nomination papers

Nomination papers for the annual Town Election for 2001 are available at the town clerk's office. In order to hold an elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be available: selectmen, two for three years; school committee, two for three years; trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library, three for three years; assessor, one for three years; board of health, one for three years; Cohasset Housing Authority, one for five years; planning board, one for five years; recreation commission, one for five years; sewer commission, one for three years; water commission, one for three years, one for one year to fill an unexpired term. Friday, March 9, is the last day to register for the annual Town Meeting, Saturday, March 31, and the annual Town Election, Saturday, April 7.

Governor backs local aid hike

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund reports that the Governor's Fiscal Year 2002 school and local aid budget recommendations for Cohasset are as follows:

School Aid (Chapter 70) $1,434,077

Additional Assistance $209,013

Lottery Distribution $435,175

This brings the Governor's total 2002 budget recommendation for Cohasset to $2,078,265, representing an increase of $132,164 over Fiscal Year 2001. For Cohasset and most communities there is an overall increase in direct educational aid.

The House of Representatives and the Senate will compile their own budgets, and deliberations on final versions will begin in the spring.

"I am pleased that the Governor has remained committed to providing vital funding for the most important aspect of the Commonwealth's budget, that of local school aid for our cities and towns," said Hedlund. "This year promises to be a challenging one as we attempt to balance fiscal restraint with important budget priorities. I hope that the Legislature and the Governor will proceed in a spirit of cooperation so we can achieve the best outcome for the children and citizens of the Commonwealth."

Bradley holds office hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley will hold district office hours this Friday, Feb. 2, in Cohasset. He will be available at the Stop & Shop, public meeting room, 400 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

If you are unable to attend but would like to meet with the representative, call (617) 722-2800 ext. 7315 to schedule an appointment at your convenience.

The $126K seat: Bradley outspends opponents 3:1 in state rep race

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Freshman state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, spent more than $126,000 in his 2000 campaign for the legislative seat, according to campaign finance reports, and outspent his Republican rival Mary Anne McKenna by a near 3 to 1 margin.

McKenna spent a total of $42,174 in her effort to succeed Mary Jeanette Murray as state representative for the Third Plymouth District. Independent candidate Walter Murray spent just $9,831.

Bradley's spending amount topped his 1998 total of $99,012 when he ran against Murray and lost. The 1998 was the fifth-highest amount spent by any state representative candidate in the state.

"It is a lot," he said, "but don't forget I had two opponents in the general election and I also had the primary. So I had three people I had to run against. That's really the way you have to look at it."

Bradley defeated fellow Hingham resident Michael Holden in the Democratic primary in September.

"Certainly it's a lot of money, but there are other races that cost just as much," he added. "To do it right, it costs money."

The numbers are compiled from Bradley's campaign finance report that is required to be filled out and sent to the Office of Campaign and Political Finance. Any person who declares his or her candidacy and then raises money, must record and account for every cent collected and spent. The names and addresses of each donor over $50 must be itemized, and the occupation of every donor of more than $200 must also be included.

Candidates have to file one report the week for the primary, another report eight days before the general election, and again in January.

Bradley spent $29,262 in the final filing period, which lasted from Oct. 21 until Dec. 31. Of that amount, $7,447 was spent on printing costs, $2,192 in advertising, $9,480 in postage for mass mailings, and $1,361 in food and coffee for volunteers and commuters.

"You've got to feed the volunteers," he said. "Anytime someone comes out on a Saturday morning [to hold signs] you have to provide food...When you have 12 people labeling 8,000 pieces of mail, the only way you can pay them is to feed them."

Despite spending $126,000 Bradley raised only $94,671 in 2000. Most of the remaining balance — $32,560 – was made up from a surplus in fund-raising in 1999. However, Bradley did list more than $3,000 in liabilities, such as $2,725 in consulting fees to Viewpoint Strategies of Newton.

Bradley was widely criticized before the election for raising large amounts of money from people outside of the district. In the third filing period, 52 contributors from outside the district donated $9,365 to his campaign. Inside the district, 33 contributors from Hingham, Cohasset and Hull gave Bradley $6,252.

He also received $2,690 from political action committees and unions, such as the Eastern Mass. Bricklayers Union, Ironworkers Local #7, and Mass. Federation of Teachers.

Bradley also received a $500 donation from Speaker Finneran's House Victory Fund, a registered PAC. Bradley said as far as he knows, just about every Democratic candidate received a donation from the fund.

McKenna received $4,355 from 10 out-of-district donors in the third filing period, including $2,000 from the Mass. State Republican Committee. She also received $4,004 from 25 in-district voters, for a total of $8,359 raised from October to December.

In that time period, she spent $12,149; the majority of which — $8,134 — was spent on printing, mailing, and copying costs. She also spent $1,468 in advertising. McKenna listed $4,656 in outstanding liabilities, including more than $900 to Community Newspaper Company and the Tinytown Gazette for advertising and $1,700 in printing costs.

Murray spent $4,087 in the third filing period, all in mailing costs. All of Murray's money came from personal loans to himself.

The amount of money Bradley spent will surely once again bring the 1998 voter-approved Clean Elections Law to the forefront.

Bradley said repeatedly throughout the campaign he would not voluntary comply to Clean Election Laws, and reiterated that again this week.

"I personally don't believe in taxpayer-funded campaigns," he said. "There are too many organizations that need our tax dollars. I don't want to spend that on campaigns."

Bradley also said he doesn't want his tax dollars to potentially go to a candidate he doesn't support. "I want my money to go to a candidate I believe in and not just anyone who can raise $1,000."

He said if people think a person can be bought for $200, "they shouldn't be voting for that person in the first place."

The Clean Election Law was supported by more than two-thirds of the voters when it passed in 1998. Under the law, a state representative candidate who opts into the system, would only be able to spend a total of $30,000 in every two-year election cycle. Of that $30,000 – candidates could only spend $18,000 before the primary and $12,000 before the general election – $24,000 would be taxpayer funded. A candidate could only raise $6,000 through private contributors. The limit for private contributions would be $100 per person per election cycle [every two years].

If the candidate's opponent does not opt into the system, and spends more than the $30,000 limit, the candidate in the system will receive matching funds up to double the campaign limit.

Theoretically, if McKenna and Murray had opted into the system, they both would have received $48,000 in taxpayers' money during this last election.

Office of Campaign and Political Finance spokesman Denis Kennedy said the Clean Election Law is scheduled to take effect March 31. He also said the office has a bill before the Legislature that would "make certain technical changes" such as modifying the timetable a candidate has to file excess expenditure reports, as well as adjust the figures for inflation.

However, Kennedy said that some people are nervous that legislators will tack on amendments to the office's bill, and effectively "gut" the program.

Bradley said though he won't participate in the program, he also won't vote to "gut" the law.

Kennedy said candidates can't be forced to abide by Clean Election Laws because "a candidate can not be restricted in how much he spends...it's a free speech issue."

Clean Election law makes level playing field

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The Massachusetts Clean Elections Law halts the rising costs of political campaigns for statewide, legislative, and Governor's Council offices and creates a level playing field for candidates.

"It is costing more and more to run a campaign for public office. Many campaigns are funded through big-dollar donations. You have incumbents raising a lot of money, and people who want to run are seeing that as an obstacle, because they can't raise enough money to run a genuine campaign," Craig Hall of Weymouth, a volunteer for Mass. Voters for Clean Elections, said. "You're not necessarily getting the best and the brightest people running for office. They're out there starting up dot-com companies."

Any expenditures over the limit in the cycle made by non-participants (in the Clean Elections law) must be disclosed and will be matched with public funds up to twice the expenditure limit for the primary or general election.

March 31, 2001 is the date, according to the Clean Elections law, that the election cycle begins.

For races beginning after March 31, for candidates who agree to fixed spending limits and $100 contribution limits, the Clean Elections Law provides a set amount of public money for primary and general elections.

Any expenditures over the limit in the cycle made by non-participants (in the Clean Elections law) must be disclosed and will be matched with public funds up to twice the expenditure limit for the primary or general election.

For each of the following state offices, clean primary election funds for certified candidates for the primary and general elections are as follows: governor, $1,500,000 for primary, $1,050,000 for general; lt. governor, $383,000-$255,000; attorney general, $360,000-$240,000; treasurer and receiver general, same as attorney general; state secretary, $120,000-$80,000; auditor, same as state secretary; councilor, $19,000-$13,000; state senator, $43,000-$29,000; and state representative, $15,000-$9,000. (Candidates can raise some money privately. State representative candidates, for example, can raise $6,000 and state senate candidates can raise $18,000 through private donations).

The law also closes the "soft money" loophole by eliminating unlimited transfers of soft money from national parties to state parties and requires the electronic disclosure of all campaign contributions to candidates and political committees.

"People supporting the law are broad-based," Hall said. "People are tired of money being able to control legislative matters.

"People recognize that we need to have candidates to challenge an incumbent. We need to have open debate. When you have a number of candidates, you find out where people stand. With an unopposed incumbent, it can be much more difficult to get information."

Hall is organizing a Mass. Voters for Clean Elections-sponsored workshop on the Clean Elections Law open to residents in area towns. The nonpartisan, nonpolitical workshop is tentatively set for Wednesday, Feb. 21, from 7-9 p.m. at the Weymouth Elks Hall, 1197 Washington St. (Route 53).

CHS Class of 1981 planning 20th reunion

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

ON THE MEND

Hello Everyone, I hope that everyone is dealing with all the illness that is around. Unfortunately, my little guy went down for the count and we spent some time in South Shore Hospital. Cody, we are very happy to see you smiling again and know that soon, you will be running around full of energy. I just want to include a big thank you to all of the staff at the South Shore Hospital for all the wonderful support and comfort that they provided to myself and Cody during this tough time. In our case, it was a matter of time and getting him back on his feet, for many others, it can be a lengthy stay and to know that the support is as wonderful as it is, is very reassuring. Thank you also to all of our great friends here in town for all of your support. It was greatly appreciated.

QUILT SHOW

Here is a reminder for all of you about the annual Quilt Show and luncheon being held by the Second Congregational Church on Cohasset Common. This will take place on Saturday, March 3 from 10:30 am to 2 p.m. The $10 donation includes a gourmet lunch and viewing of the over 50 amazing quilts. Advanced purchase of tickets is recommended as seating is limited. Call the church office at 383-0345 to make reservations. If you have a quilt that you would like displayed, call Carol Sandblom at 383-1812. This wonderful fund-raiser is to benefit a very important cause, Pediatric AIDS! Hope to see you there.

SCHOOL COUNCIL CANDIDATES

As was reported to all of you last week, the PSO is seeking candidates for all the schools to serve on the council. If you have a student who will be attending the Middle/High School for the next two school years (2001-2003) you are eligible to serve on the Middle/High School Council. This council is comprised of the principal, teachers, parent community and community representatives. It is each council's charge to formulate and update the schools improvement plan, and to identify and put into action missions and goals for each school. This year, there are openings for two parent representatives at the Middle/High school. Council members are elected by the parent body of the school and serve two-year terms. If you are interested in serving, please send your name and paragraph about yourself and why you would like to serve on the council to: PSO Nomination Committee, c/o Susan Biddle Jaffe, 10 Wood Way, Cohasset MA, 02025, SBJaffe@aol.com The deadline for candidate entries is Feb. 12. Balloting will be held March 2-9 with the announcement of new council members to be made on March 20 at the PSO Monthly meeting.

CLASS OF '81 REUNION

Hey, anyone out there from the CHS class of 1981 make sure to read this! A 20th reunion is being planned for this summer and some people need to be "found" and your help is greatly needed. The following list are the people being looked for. Michael Glasfeld, Brooke Henderson, Scott Hurlbut, Rebecca Osborne, Bob Lindsey, Michael Clark, Chuck Stockbridge, Jason Gill, Leslie Potts, Liz Goggin and METCO students, Paula Bouknight, Webster Roach, Aundrea "Peachie" Latson. If anyone knows how to get in touch with any of these people, please respond to Tina (Fiori) Danielson at 781-545-3371 or email Tina at tdan@att.net

COLLEGE HONORS

Fairfield University of Fairfield, Connecticut sent me some news about a Cohasset student. Jennifer Cellucci, daughter of Don and Judy was named to the Dean's List with a 3.9 average. Jennifer, a senior, is majoring in school of Business Marketing and French. She is also active in Alpha Mu Gamma and the French Honor Society. Jennifer is a graduate of Notre Dame Academy in Hingham and her family is very proud of her. Great Job, Jennifer!

MARKETING PROJECT

Joseph Magner of Cohasset, a student in management Profession Sylvia Keyes' sales management class at Bridgewater State recently participated in a sales conference at the college. The conference was the culmination of semester-long marketing projects the students worked on in various businesses and agencies. The students made presentations about the work they had done, and were congratulated by Professor Keyes for their outstanding accomplishments during the fall semester. Joseph was part of the team that worked for the Plymouth County Development Council. The team sold advertising for the whole semester and exceeded the goals set for them by the council. They worked with Rick Apel, executive director of the council. Way to go, Joseph!

DEAN'S LIST

Let's hear it for Cohasset's Amanda Gontarz who has been named to the Dean's List at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Penn. for the fall semester. To achieve this honor, Amanda had to maintain a 3.5 or better grade point average and carry at least 12 hours of courses. Well done, Amanda!

VALENTINE SOIREE

Make sure to get your tickets to the St. Valentine Soiree being held on Saturday, Feb 10 by the Cohasset PSO. This is going to be a wonderful evening of fun, dancing and socializing from 7-11 p.m. The cost is $40 per person or $75 per couple and you can get your tickets from any of the PSO members or by calling Janeen Culhane at 383-2349! Also being revealed on this night will be the winners of the wonderful Chinese Baskets! If you wish to purchase tickets for these, please call Jennifer Piepenbrink at 923-1057 or email me at jenpiep@yahoo.com. Tickets are $1 each and these baskets were gorgeous last year!

HONOR ROLL

Philips Academy reported that a former Cohasset student, Allanna Hughes recently made honor roll for the first marking period. Allanna and her family moved recently to Andover to be closer to the school but are still very much connected to this town. Great job, Allanna!

JUST PERFECT

Chris and Kate Collins-Wooley let me know of some wonderful news about their daughter, Mareth. Mareth was a CHS graduate of 2000 and is currently a freshman at Eastern Nazerene. She was able to make a 4.0, the best you can get! What a great accomplishment, Mareth! Everyone is so proud of you.

That is it for this week. Send in all your news to me at: jenpiep@yahoo.com or ATSchoolsIn@aol.com, 622 CJC Highway or call it in at 923-1057 Have a Great Week!

Genealogy focus of meeting

The Cohasset Historical Society is sponsoring a genealogy workshop Feb. 15 at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers Cottage. The speaker is Bob Edmands, a Mayflower passenger descendant and member of the Alden family board.

Refreshments will be served. For information on the society call 383-1434 or Martha Gjesteby, 383-1614.

South Shore Community Center plans for a secure future

Kicks off endowment fund drive

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The South Shore Community Center isn't a pool hall — but putting on an addition 20 years ago did put the facility behind the eight ball.

And while Cohasset is not River City, the center has kept both young and old off the streets with myriad offerings since its founding 50 years ago.

Mortgage and debt service was financially strapping the popular center until about three years ago, when the determined board of directors raised upwards of $200,000 — enough to bring the center back into the black.

And now, the board plans to go one step further and create a permanent endowment fund that will ensure the facility is here in perpetuity despite any undulations in the economy.

"As a building, it is beautiful and historic and as a facility, it mostly serves two of our greatest assets — our children and the elderly," said board member Mary Larson, who is spearheading the effort to make the center financially solvent. She also pointed out that the community center is one of the only affordable function halls in town for birthday parties and other events.

Larson explained that the motivation behind establishing an endowment fund is to ensure that the center will never be awash in red ink again.

"We never want to be in the situation we were in three to four years ago, when we didn't have enough money to cover expenses," she said. "We were faced with the possibility of closing the doors or not having enough to pay the staff or to heat the building."

Plans are to raise upwards of $250,000 through private donations over the next five years and once the money is accumulated, use the interest to pay for expenses such as a new roof.

"We want no more loans, no more second mortgages," she said.

Stephanie Church, program director, said the center has close to 800 members. Annual membership fees are $40 per family, $30 for an individual and $15 for a senior citizen. Course fees run $10-$20 cheaper for members. Upwards of 1,000 people walk through the community center doors every week. The nursery school has an enrollment of 115 and there are 250 children in the gymnastics programs. The facility also houses the senior center that pays a yearly rent to the center.

"It's a pretty busy place," Church said. She said the size of the Colonial building makes it costly to run.

Church said a community center is something to be treasured.

"Marshfield has talked to me about starting a community center," she said. "But it is a huge undertaking — and if you don't already have one, it would be tough to afford it."

The Cohasset center, a nonprofit corporation, is not funded through tax dollars but through program fees and donations. But Church pointed out for a town to start a center today, it would likely fall behind infrastructure necessities such as sewers and the like on the priority list.

Seventy-percent of those who participate in the center come from Cohasset with the balance from Scituate, Norwell and Hingham, Church said.

The endowment fund is set up to accept donations of cash or securities, said center treasurer Diane McLevedge. So far $48,000 has been raised ($4,600 of that in stock) with another $9,000 promised. The board of directors raised the first $20,000 to kick the endowment fund drive off, McLevedge said.

All contributions are tax deductible and may be sent to the South Shore Community Center, 3 N. Main St. Securities should go to McNamara Financial Services, c/o US Charitable Trust Fund/South Shore Community Center, 760 CJC Hwy., Cohasset 02025.

Larson said the center really belongs to the community.

"We really see this as 'our' community center," she said. "Every member of the town should take pride it what it does and how it looks."

She said the building at the edge of the village and town common should always look nice and be in good repair.

"If it doesn't, it reflects badly on the whole town," Larson said.

Animal control

Seen any coyotes lately?

If you haven't yet — it won't be long before you will.

We saw one crossing North Main Street a few weeks back in broad daylight.

The growing population of coyotes and foxes is just one reason why we think selectmen should back the police chief's request for five more hours a week for the animal control officer.

Dealing with wildlife problems has eaten into the 20 hours per week allotted to Paul Murphy, who has served as the town's animal control officer for the past several years.

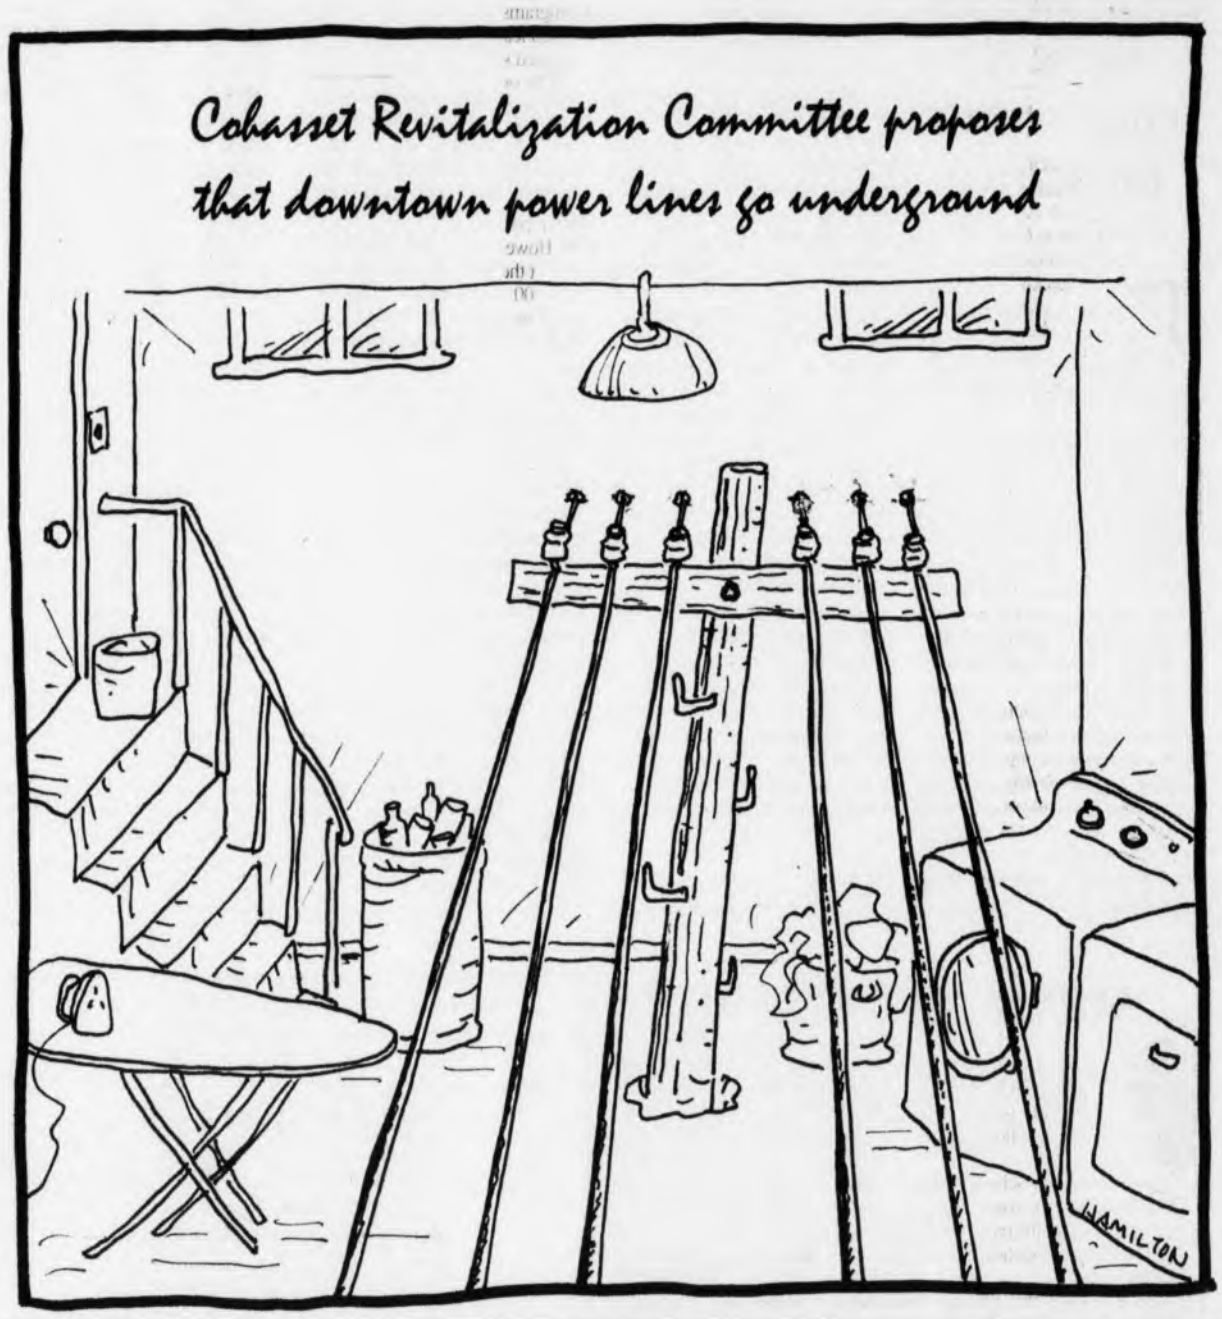
Unleashed and unlicensed dogs and feral cat complaints, as well as dead crows suspected of harboring the West Nile Virus also add to the workload. Remember the town also has a "pooper-scooper" law that needs enforcing.

Mr. Murphy is paid a little more than $12 an hour for his work. By comparison, the Hingham animal control officer, who is full time, makes $20 an hour. Cohasset's animal control officer is a bargain.

An increase is hours is needed and deserves the town's support.

Future planning

There's no doubt Cohasset is lucky to have people like Mary Larson and the other members of the board of directors at the South Shore Community Center who have vision.



Thanks to this group, the community center that provides such a positive outlet especially for children and the elderly in town will continue to thrive.

It wasn't always that way. Just three to four years ago, the facility was so strapped financially there was a real possibility it might have had to shut its doors.

However, through a tireless fund-raising effort and the generosity of many contributors, the financial side of the popular center has been turned around. Now plans are underway to establish a permanent endowment fund to make sure that our children and our children's will always have a community center in Cohasset.

It speaks well of a town to have an attractive facility that is open to all and managed and paid for without burdening the taxpayer. There is no better way to put the true meaning of "community" into community center.

POLITICAL NOTES

Bradley defends Finneran vote

In one of his first votes, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, voted to rescind the amendment that limits House speakers to four terms, as part of the debate on the rules for the new legislative session last week.

The term-limit issue received some attention thanks to controversial House Speaker Thomas Finneran, who just one day before the 111-39 vote in favor, said he didn't want the amendment removed. The speaker's detractors said by eliminating term limits, the house essentially named Finneran "Speaker for Life."

Bradley defended his vote, saying he is against any type of term limits. He also said that he doubts Finneran will take advantage of the change. "No speaker has served more than 9-1/2 years, and Finneran has been there four years now. That's a long time to be in that position," Bradley said. "If the House feels he is not doing a good job, they'll have to get together and vote to unseat him.

"It's a tough job to do. I don't think you're going to see this speaker there that long."

Bradley denied that his desire to receive a good committee designation prompted his vote. Bradley was named to the Government Regulations and Campaign Law committees on Monday. "It came down to term limits," Bradley said about the vote. "It wasn't about Tom Finneran, it was about my fundamental beliefs."

Bradley hold office hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley will hold district office hours this Friday, Feb. 2, in Cohasset. He will be available at the Stop & Shop, public meeting room, 400 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

If you are unable to attend but would like to meet with the representative, call (617) 722-2800 ext. 7315 to schedule an appointment at your convenience.

Village petition

TO THE EDITOR:

Crowd psychologists and other observers of the human comedy would have ample material to study in the metamorphosis of attitudes relative to revitalization.

At first, the purveyors of the nonsensical notion that the town would be Nantucketized were remarkably successful. The rumor spread, multiplied and infected like fleas at a hobo convention. Some less-than-brilliant braying about "corporate colors" was displayed when one of the backers presumed to correct some of the deficiencies of the neglected waterfront. At the initial workshop, ad hominem remarks bordering on the vicious were directed at the backers. And so on!

Each succeeding workshop has been more civil, more adult, more thoughtful. Now some are complaining about lack of progress!. Sure, some attendees are there only to express their skepticism, but the atmosphere no longer encourages intemperate and immature remarks.

There is now a new petition circulating to express support in principle for preservation through revitalization, and acknowledging that most of the features that make Cohasset a great town result from the initiative and energy of citizen groups. I'm told that the greatest difficulty in getting signatures is that many are so offended by the negativism that they want stronger language in the new petition!

The backers of the original petition published it in the belief that "it would speak for itself". Well, it did, perhaps to the embarrassment of some who hadn't thought enough about what they had signed. Essentially, it advocated reliance on government initiative instead of the initiative of a citizens' group.

Well, stay tuned. Time will reveal whether we can get together and do something constructive.

School budget

TO THE EDITOR:

To members of the School Committee and Cohasset community:

The teacher's role in the budget process is to request materials, supplies and books; in short, the "tools" to perform their jobs. The administration proposes the staffing levels as they see fit within the budget constraints they have been given by you and the town. Knowing that, I still feel obligated to share some thoughts with you regarding the budget decisions you are about to make.

Our goal as Cohasset teachers is to help each student to learn and succeed. Our community has grown accustomed to a high quality of academic performance from its children and its school system. Over the last ten years, over 90 percent of Cohasset High School's graduates have been accepted to four-year colleges and universities — an achievement of which any school would be proud.

As I'm sure you are painfully aware, the last two school budgets were level funded. For the most part, the additional items being requested for next year are due to increased enrollment and are not "frills." The numbers are up. We have 71 students graduating from CHS and 154 in kindergarten. In the Middle School next year, there will be over 60 more children than this year. Considerable scientific research has shown that small class sizes significantly contribute to student success; yet, in Cohasset we have some classes with 30 students. Further, special education students are "included" in these classes requiring special accommodations, services and strategies from the teachers. Smaller classes are essential to help our caring teachers to better meet the diverse needs of our students.

Last year, both elementary schools had a technology teacher. Through the budget process, the Osgood's technology teacher was eliminated. This year, the former Deer Hill technology teacher has been spending half time at each school. This teacher is responsible to hold classes for the children of both schools, maintain the computers of both schools, and help train the regular education teachers of both schools on how to integrate technology into their curricula. The return of the second technology position is not a "frill" it is a necessity. MCAS testing will have a technology portion and how will students be prepared for that and the life skills they need in using computers?

The Department of Education continues to make changes to the curriculum frameworks and to the MCAS. Cohasset teachers are rewriting curriculum, as well as, developing new strategies to teach critical thinking, conflict resolution, and problem solving skills through professional development activities provided by the school system and on their own in graduate courses. MCAS is a reality; yet, the material to be tested is in a constant state of flux. This provides a special challenge for teachers. Although most of our students have done well on the MCAS, some students will need extra remediation support. Our budget needs to provide for this important state imposed requirement.

In conclusion, the teachers have seen the needs of our schools grow due to increasing enrollment and two years of a level funded budget. I implore you to approve a budget that recognizes our schools' needs for additional teaching, clerical, and custodial staff, as well as, providing the supplies necessary for teachers to do their jobs. These are not "frills", rather, necessary components for maintaining the high achievement level we have all come to expect. The children of Cohasset deserve nothing less.

Parents and sports

TO THE EDITOR:

(In response to From the Sidelines, "Parents fight, kids watch" Cohasset Mariner, 1-12-01) It's always distressing to see the stories about the failures of athletic programs and the reactions of parents which have now even escalated into murder.

I've been casually researching since questions came up with sports here in Cohasset. Not surprising were some similarities, seemingly all over the US.

- Most sports tend to be operated by volunteers unskilled with management, parental or group skills. They are there because their kids signed up, they know somebody, and are untested and unscreened.
- Some "coaches" never played the games at a high level, or were inadequate in their understanding, had poor skills, and have little or nothing to pass on to kids, and don't. They are there in redemption of their frustration as as youth.
- No counseling or development of coaches.
- Frequently, those with teaching ability, coaching skills, and enthusiasm are undermined by those who have none, leaving good coaches frustrated when leagues adopt "just let them play" rules. Years later these same people wonder why their programs failed and their kids are skills-behind other towns.

Red flags and bad signs in youth sports:

- League leaders and administrators whose kids are always on the top teams, are always starters, or have other favored privileges.
- Same volunteer coaches year in and out despite willing volunteers on the sidelines.
- Other blocking of, or bias to, volunteers.
- Ambiguous, changing rules.
- Constant conflicts with other sport or event schedules.
- Coaches who don't know fundamentals or rules.
- Random coaching goals or guidelines — no unified league mission.
- Unwelcoming of parental participation. (ex: "Stand aside, we know what we're doing," with no follow up counseling of the parent, who has a right to understand/participate in their kids activities.)
- General disorganization, poorly maintained and distributed equipment.
- Abuse from coaches to players, parents and refs without recourse.
- "We won" or "we lost" is the only message taught/learned from the event.
- Nonsensical agreements, permission or indemnity clauses.
- No solid or effective means of communication with league.

Public athletic programs are works in progress, and can offer the best or worst a community can offer its youth. However, many programs validate themselves by social circles, gangs, and won-loss records. For so many, they can only recite the win-loss record and not what is being offered, or what was taught and learned in any given season or year. What is your High School sports hero doing these days? Some who "peaked" on the cheers of their townspeople and had no idea where to go after aren't doing as well.

The stories seem to go on and on, and will without more outside evaluation and less self-validation by many running leagues. Most of them have nothing to do with youth, youth activities, or have any certification or practice aside from their league experience in their professional lives. We insist on certified teachers, camp counselors, and others, but allow town-league activities to operate by/with lay people, and the results are often too clear. Fistfights? Murders? And that's just the stuff we here about, the headlines. More damage occurs behind the scenes.

As a result, what we are now teaching and learning is that assaults, murders, and abuse will be the memories many adults and children have of the "sporting" life they participated in. The key to success in sports, as in any community event, is opportunity and support for all. Adults are just as inclined to need teaching, counseling, and nurturing in their "new" roles as coaches as their children are. When bigotry, exclusion, and authoritarianism are part of the athletic process, it's no different than any other activity which encompasses hate, and will produce the same result....did you win or did you lose?

Summer Institute is gearing up

Informative session tonight at CMHS

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The idea of taking school-credit classes during the summer is usually as appealing to schoolchildren as turnip flavored ice cream. But when those classes consist of trips to Glacier National Park in Montana, or spending summer days on Cohasset Harbor, interest picks up quickly.

For the third year, the Summer Institute will offer Cohasset and other area students the opportunity to remain in an academic environment but also take advantage of the summer months outdoors.

"It gets kids out of the classroom to do some real science in an outdoor setting," said Dave Magnussen, a Summer Institute instructor and also the math and science department head at Cohasset Middle/High School.

Magnussen and fellow Cohasset High School instructor Jack Buckley put together the first summer program in 1999. A dozen local kids took part in a maritime studies program, that taught rowing, oceanography, and local maritime history. Last year, armed with a grant from the Massachusetts Academy of Teachers, the institute expanded, attracting more than 20 students.

This year, the Summer Institute will offer paid internship opportunities, and five different classes that includes the trip to Glacier National Park, an ecology course on the White Mountains, North River exploration and the original maritime studies course, but this time with an overnight trip on the Schooner Ernestina at the end.

"Kids will be introduced to the basic concept of oceanography, maritime history and environmental concerns of the day," Buckley said about the maritime studies class. "They'll spend most of the time out learning how to row and sail and become a crew."

Also, participants can choose to help with an MIT-sponsored water-quality monitoring project in Little Harbor.

"It will teach students how to do a true scientific project," Buckley said. "That way the data they collect will be usable for the town, and just not dismissed as a high school project some kids worked on."

Cohasset High School science instructor Patty McGrail, who has overseen the water quality monitoring project for the past two summers said the institute provides "a practical use for things they learn in the classroom."

McGrail calls the Summer Institute a type of "experiential education" and a style of teaching that she is trying to move closer towards in her own classroom. "The type of programs I run are much more the way I prefer to teach and learn," she said.

The classes are staggered so a student could participate in every course if he or she wanted to.

"A lot of the classes are condensed into a 10-day period," said Buckley. "We came to the conclusion that short intensive programs work best in the summer, because they don't interfere with everything else such as family vacations."

One prohibitive factor, however, is cost. Basic registration fee is $75.00. However, the Glacier National Park field study course at the end of July is expected to cost upwards of $1,500 a person. The maritime studies course and trip on the Ernestina will cost $500, less if more than 20 people sign up.

Buckley said he hopes to have scholarship money available for some students.

Though the program purposely avoids locking participants in a classroom, they are expected to do some academic work.

"The format used is to make use of the learning environment you're in," said Buckley. "If they're hiking down a trail and come into a wetland and want to talk about wetlands an primary succession, you do that. The kids are very willing to sit down and take notes, though they may moan and groan a bit."

"All the courses have a significant academic component," said Magnussen. However, the payoff for Cohasset students is that the Summer Institute can count towards their school transcript. Each class, if successfully completed, is worth 1.25 credits.

Buckley said the program isn't just for students proficient in science, but hopefully for everyone. "It's been a variety of kids [in past years]," he said. "They see it as a way to challenge themselves.

"I hope kids will think it's exciting. I certainly do."

The Summer Institute will hold an informative session tonight, Feb. 1 at the Cohasset Middle/High School Cafeteria at 7:30 p.m.

Additional information can also be obtained by contacting Jack Buckley at jbuckley@chs.ssec.org or the Summer Institute website www.ssec.org/cohasset/student/SummerInstitute

Extraordinary sailing journey is subject of benefit

At age 18, Tania Aebi sailed out of the South Street Seaport Museum in New York and began an historic solo circumnavigation aboard her 26 foot sailboat Varuna.

In November of 1987, having sailed over 27,000 miles, Tania completed her journey and became not only one of the youngest individuals to complete a solo circumnavigation, but also the first American woman to have accomplished such a formidable task. Please join the yacht club for an evening with Tania as she shares the thrills, the adventures, and the trials of her extraordinary journey around alone.

The event is Saturday, Feb. 10 at 7 p.m. St. Anthony's Parish Center 129 South Main St. Proceeds will benefit the Cohasset High School Marine Studies Program and Summer Institute. This program has received annual support from the Cohasset Yacht Club for the past five years. The lecture is open to the public and is free for students. Space is limited so please make your reservation early by calling Meg Bertolami at 781 383-2968 Cost: $15 per person (students free but make a reservation please) Payment required in advance. Refreshments will be served

Vacation tea

The Cohasset Dramatic Club, in conjunction with the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will present a tea for school-age children Thursday, Feb. 22, at 1 p.m.

The cast of the current dramatic club production, "How to Eat Like a Child," will be on hand to entertain all who attend. Look for more details in the next couple of weeks.

Museum Passes

As February school vacation approaches, remember the following passes are offered to all Cohasset residents.

The museum passes funded by the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library are The Museum of Fine Arts, Boston Children's Museum, The Computer Museum, John F. Kennedy Library & Museum, The New England Aquarium, The Museum of Science, and The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum.

Other passes to Plimoth Plantation and to the USS Constitution are available and are a gift of Lucille McLoughlin.

An information sheet about the museums, including addresses, hours and phone numbers is available at the front desk. Call the library 24 hours ahead at 383-1348 to secure passes.

In the Children's Room

A new rack of children's music has been installed in the Children's Room of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

It is located on the Children's Room desk just to the left of Mrs. Terry's computer and includes a wonderful selection of children's CDs and audiocassettes.

Choose from classical CDs like "Peter & the Wolf," conducted by Andre Previn and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. It is part of the Young Person's Guide to Orchestra Series. On a more contemporary note, Blue's Clues will capture your preschooler with "Blue's Big Musical Movie." Your youngster will sing, dance, play and learn they can be anything they want to be. "Baby Needs Bach" enriches your child's early musical experience. Beautiful melodies offer reassurance and comfort to young and old.

Music should be a part of every child's life. The next time you are checking out a book for your child, why not check out the music display as well.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Callahan announces his re-election bid

With the filing of his nomination papers Jan. 29, Tom Callahan announces his candidacy for re-election to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen.

Currently serving as Chairman of the Board, Callahan, 42, will seek his second term on the board. Callahan previously served for nine years on the Conservation Commission.

Callahan says he has four goals for his next term, all deriving from work and initiatives undertaken over the last three years:

1. Continuing the development of a town Master Plan and seeing it through to completion.

Continued participation in regional planning bodies and regional efforts regarding the future of education funding

Continuing is close scrutiny of budgets to insure the town is run in a fiscally reasonable way, squaring a reasonable tax burden with the demands and expectations for town services.

Keeping the MBTA honest if the, Greenbush line is restored and the proposed mitigation deal is implemented.

I still oppose Greenbush on a number of grounds, but if it comes, we have no choice but to make the best deal we can to mitigate impacts. The "T" has been very difficult to deal with, and it will be important to keep its feet to the fire regarding its agreements should this project go forward", he said.

Callahan, an attorney, lives on Hillside Drive with his wife, Alison and their children Katie and Peter, and has been a Cohasset resident since 1985.

Tom Callahan

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MCAS slap in face

TO THE EDITOR:

I was deeply offended by your headline, "Fourth-graders get F on MCAS" in your Jan. 25 issue. This headline was a slap in the face both to our students and their fine, dedicated and hard-working educators. The MCAS has become a looming menace hanging over our classrooms. Wonderful teachers are being asked to suspend their creativity in order to push, push, push their students to perfect the skills sampled by this test. Though elementary students are individuals who develop unevenly in different academic skill areas, teachers are being asked to set aside their wise, professional judgment about whether it is appropriate or beneficial to their students to push them in a certain area. They are being mandated, instead, to make their sensitive, educational decisions based on the numerical bottom line of MCAS performance. As a result, the educational process is losing its excitement for both the teachers and their students. The joy of learning is being replaced with drudgery. And now the Cohasset educators, whose fourth-grade students already ranked 63rd out of 294 towns and school districts, are being asked to push harder. Cohasset students and their teachers should be supported and congratulated by your newspaper, not insulted.

Mary Ann Cushing
Parent of Osgood third-grader
271 Beechwood St.

Objects to title

TO THE EDITOR:

As a fourth-grade teacher at Deer Hill School, I'm writing with concern about the title given to the Informational article about MCAS test results here at the school. Stating, "Fourth Graders get F on MCAS", this title clearly does not accurately portray the content of the article. If a reader did not take the time to read the article and only scanned the front page of your paper, he or she would go away with a wrong idea about how the students performed during last year's testing.

It has always been my belief that a headline's intent is to give a reader a quick synopsis of the following article's information. The above-mentioned headline did not do this, and this is what is upsetting.

Perhaps you are not aware how many fourth graders, as well as other elementary level students, read your paper, or at least the front page. As an adult, and especially one who works in the school system, I am able to separate the meaning of your inaccurate title with the truth. However, I feel very sorry for any current fifth grader who read this headline and took it to heart. The students worked very hard last year, and it is unfortunate that rather than reading either an accurate title or one that congratulated their efforts, they read one that could have made them feel like failures.

Laura Keating
Fourth-grade teacher

Poor headline

TO THE EDITOR:

I am concerned about the title "Fourth Graders get F on MCAS" which accompanied the article on the front page of the Cohasset Mariner on Jan. 25, and also was repeated on page 10. In my opinion this title is an example of "sensationalism" that is not normally associated with your paper.

As I stated in a notice to parents on Friday, Jan. 26, last year's fourth graders did not fail the MCAS tests. The average score of the 1999 and 2000 MCAS tests did not improve over the 1998 MCAS by as much of a margin as the State had recommended. The State said we failed to meet the improvement rating that was assigned to us. There is a difference between failing the MCAS tests and failing to meet an improvement level.

I think that any reader of the article in the paper would realize the title does not accurately reflect the content of the article and the information that the system's Curriculum Coordinator Ruth Fennessey, School Committee Chairperson Patricia Martin, and I presented. I think it was a good article and presented the information well, but again the title did not match the article.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I watched the Super Bowl Sunday night and I thought it was real cool.

I thought the best play came right after the opening coin toss when the nice lady explained to the little girl how someday a white knight would sweep her off her feet and spirit her away to his castle where they would be married and live happily ever after.

Of course, if it doesn't work out, the little girl will still have her Charles Schwab stock portfolio to tide her over.

Then, and only then, do we see the nice lady is Sarah Ferguson, the former Duchess of York who was swept off her feet and carried away by Prince Andrew, second in line for the British throne.

Their marriage didn't work out either, so now Sarah is hustling stocks and bonds for the counting house of Charles Schwab after a brief apprenticeship hawking cranberries.

I also liked the part of the game where the herd of squirrels chases the Spaniards through the streets of Pamplona, all in the name of CDS.com.

Now if I ever find out what CDS stands for, the game will be a commercial as well as artistic success.

Occasionally, this action was interrupted by a football game between some guys in blue sweaters and some other guys in white suits.

Occasionally, this action was interrupted by a football game between some guys in blue sweaters and some other guys in white suits.

The guys in blue sweaters I was told included one who groped Miss Nebraska during his fun-loving college days.

And one of the white suits was worn by a fellow who was charged with obstruction of justice in a murder investigation.

It could have been worse, though.

It could have been the team with a tight end who is currently on trial for raping a teen-aged baby sitter at an after-prom party.

Or it could have been the team with the wide receiver who has just been sentenced to 18 years in the slam for hiring someone to whack out his pregnant girl friend.

The winning team, I am told, was the Baltimore Ravens, who used to be the Cleveland Browns before they moved to Baltimore to replace the Colts when they moved to Indianapolis.

The Browns, of course, replaced the Rams in Cleveland when they became the Los Angeles Rams and now they are the St. Louis Rams, replacing the St. Louis Cardinals who came from Chicago and are now in Phoenix.

Am I going too fast for you?

But I digress . . .

If you get the idea that the football game that started it all way back in 1967 is now incidental to the commercials and the E*trade Halftime Show, featuring Aerosmith and In Synch with a guest appearance by Britney Spears in a stage setting that reminded old timers of a Busby Berkeley musical.

The E*trade Halftime Show came just after the Verizon-wireless Halftime Report in which five analysts, including unemployed coaches Mike Ditka and Jerry Glanville, explained to us what we had just seen.

And for 30 seconds of airtime, Pepsi, Bud Lite and all the gang were paying $2.3 million, almost as much as the Red Sox are paying for a right fielder who bats four or five times a game and calls fly balls an adventure.

CBS also used the Super Bowl to promote its lesser shows, especially the new "Survivor" which takes place in the Australian outback and was due to be shown right after the Super Bowl.

One of the promos for a half hour comedy called "Becker" starring Ted Danson had Danson himself complaining to a waitress that the Super Bowl was turning into one big promo while a promo for "Becker" was flashing on the screen.

At least someone at CBS has a sense of humor.

users and advertisers," said Lynn Carberry, senior vice president of new media, for CNC. "For the past five years, Town Online has served as an extension of the local newspaper. Now, we can invite users to get involved in all aspects of their community through the interactivity of Town Online."

The site also will incorporate a new content management system powered by Openpages. Town Online will use Openpages ContentWare to manage and dynamically publish content from the more than 100 newspapers CNC publishes throughout Eastern Massachusetts.

Town Online's new navigation breaks the site into six easy-to-use segments:

• News: A comprehensive suburban daily for Eastern Massachusetts, where you'll find the top local, regional and national stories, as well as in-depth local news from more than 120 Eastern Massachusetts communities, including such things as police and fire logs, obituaries, social news, guides and more.

• Marketplace: A new local shopping directory, powered by Placelinks' Local Commerce Directory System. The new 160-town directory replaces Town Online's current directory, expanding CNC's market size. It offers improved yellow pages, self-service ad management for small businesses, and improved search ability, allowing shoppers to search by specific brands, products, services, activities and street name. In this section, you'll also find local coupons and specials, as well as Shop Town Online's local marketplace for shopping or browsing merchants close to home.

• Community: Town Online's popular Community Connections program continues offering free web sites for non-profit organizations. Town Online currently houses more than 1,800 community groups, sports teams and religious organizations. New to Town Online, users can now build personal or family web sites at no charge. You'll also find community resources, town information and a "find-a-person" feature.

• Forums: Town Online has expanded its popular chat series. Beginning in January, you can join Town Online every Tuesday for "Talk of the Town," where chat guests and users can interact on various topics. Every day, users can interact within their city or town, or discuss points of interest through the Town Online Bulletin Boards. Users also can join email newsletters on topics such as local news headlines, parenting information and finding the right job.

• Classifieds: Featuring Greater Boston's popular classified marketplace, CommunityClassifieds.com, users can search for a home, a car, a job, services, and even find a date.

• Entertainment: New to Town Online, users can now purchase tickets to movies, sporting events, museums, special shows and more. In a partnership with EnSpot.com, Town Online users will be able to search the largest events database on the Internet, set personalized event schedules by day or by week, and receive event newsletters and special discounts via email. Town Online will also offer expanded arts coverage in both the city and suburbs. Users will be able to find movie reviews, movie listings, museums and more.

We'll give you something to smile about.

Boys qualify for tourney

And keep first place hopes alive

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Well, they're in.

With their tenth win of the season, an 84-45 shellacking of the South Shore Christian Academy Warriors, Cohasset is back into the Division 3 State Tournament.

Of course, after jumping out to an 8-2 start to start the season, qualifying for the tournament was pretty much regarded a formality.

Nevertheless, simply knowing they're in, allows the Skippers to breathe a sigh of relief.

"We got out to such a good record," said 10th year coach Ron Ford. "But it's still nice to get it out of the way."

With a record now of 11-4, with their thrilling 60-57 win over Norwell Tuesday, the Skippers were one of the first four teams in the division of over thirty teams to reach the double digit win mark.

"We would be somewhere in the top eight (if the season ended today," speculated Ford.

This is a very tight race though, as any number of teams could come away with the sectional title.

"I think there are four or five very good teams in the sectionals," appraised Ford, referring to such strong clubs as Cardinal Spellman, Rockland, Scituate, Carver and Norwell. "At least one team from our league will be going to UMass Boston (to play in the sectional finals)."

Indeed, Cohasset has found itself in a very thick race for the South Shore League title. With their win over Norwell on Tuesday, the Skippers are now in a three way tie for second place with Norwell and Norton, who also have three losses in league, with Carver (10-1, 6-1) maintaining its hold on first place.

The Skippers lost some ground in their quest for the SSL crown last Friday though, with a 64-41 loss to the Lancers of Norton. With their other two league losses coming to Abington (right behind them with four league losses) and first place Carver, the Skippers will obviously need a bit of luck to take the league title.

"We lost our ability to control our own destiny," admitted Ford, "but I think it could happen. It's a dog-fight, and I am happy to be in the middle of it."

In the Norton game, sophomore power forward Ben Lynner filled the scorer's book with nine points, nine rebounds, three blocks and two steals.

Senior tri-captain TJ Bilodeau, who led the way with 17 points against South Shore Christian, recorded eight points and four boards.

Cohasset was in the game for the entire first half, going into the break down six. But in the second half, a massive Lancer run turned what was a six point deficit at 11:51 into a 60-35 bulge with two minutes remaining.

"Norton was the worst game we have played all year," asserted Ford.

Hanover edges Cohasset gymnasts again...

...but Cohasset's Sheerin takes top individual honors in the showdown between elite squads

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The Hanover High girls gymnastics team officially became an enormous pain in the neck for Cohasset-Norwell on Tuesday night.

The Indians became the only team this winter to defeat the Skippers twice this season – let alone once – with their 130.45-123.35 win to finish a perfect 8-0 in the Pilgrim Conference 2.

Indians head coach Jayne Schleiff expected her undefeated squad to defeat Cohasset-Norwell last night after dealing the Skippers their lone loss earlier this season.

"We go against every team twice and we beat them all the first time, so we wanted to do it again the second time around," said Schleiff, whose Hanover team has been on a roll with consistent scores in the 130s. "The girls' routines are the same every meet. They're just happy that they're undefeated. They're not overconfident."

Hanover's top score of the season was a 131.4, but Schleiff was quick to point out it was more than likely inflated because it was accomplished on a spring floor in a private club, a huge advantage for any team. "That surface enhances anyone's score," she admitted.

The Indians simply wanted to defeat Cohasset-Norwell and clinch the perfect dual-meet record. The Skippers, who have struggled without injured co-captain Carlie Carter in the line-up, never had much of a chance to deal the Indians their first loss of the season as Hanover took two of the top three in every event.

Freshman Kerianne Hart and Shannon Gerrish led the Indians up front, but it was the Skippers' Kristin Sheerin who had the last individual laugh. Sheerin was the lone Skipper gymnast to crack into the top three and defeated the superb Hart by the narrowest of margins in the all-around, 35.1 to 35.05.

"With their depth and consistency, we can't compete against them," conceded Cohasset-Norwell head coach Kara Connerty. "And we can't compete against them with these injuries.

"Coming in, we wanted to stick each routine."

Despite the fact that Hart defeated Sheerin in three of the four individual events, Sheerin dogged her the entire meet and dominated the balance beam. Sheerin beat Hart on the beam 8.8 to 8.5 to pull away. Gerrish was third with a score of 33.2

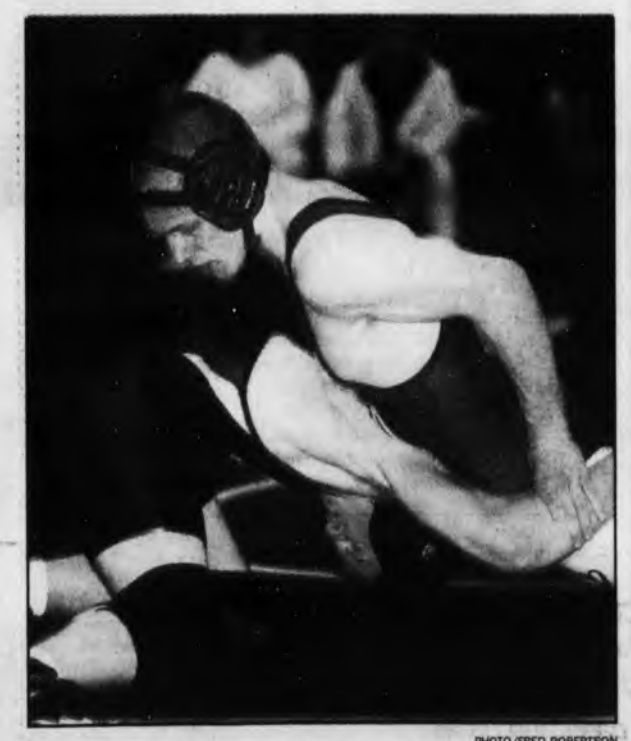
Cohasset's wrestling future looks bright

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Coming on the heels of the legendary 1998-99 wrestling season, where Cohasset's squad finished second in the state, the last two years have paled in comparison. But the future of the wrestling program; now that is a different story.

Led by a host of athletic sophomores, freshman and enthusiastic eighth graders,18th year coach Torin Sweeney feels confident his squad can rise back up to the upper tier of division three wrestling teams within the next few years.



"No question about it," reported Sweeney. "These kids are as good as the team of 1999 when they were freshmen and sophomores."

Among the names highlighted at the tenth grade level was 130 pounder Terry Baroudi, who placed third in front of a home crowd at the Cohasset Tournament last Saturday, and in the extremely competitive Whitman/Hanson tourney.

Though Baroudi will miss a few weeks with a shoulder injury, Sweeney is looking forward to having him back for the sectionals in February.

Sweeney also mentioned sophomore Greg O'Brien, who filled in admirably for senior John Hertig at

Skippers test Hanover again

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

This is progress. Dennis Walsh wanted to make that clear right off the bat.

Now, on paper, one might not think this is the case.

In their initial meeting this season, on Jan. 3, the Skippers took Hanover into the final five minutes tied at two before falling 4-2. The powerhouse Indians outshot Cohasset, 44-23 in that game. Goalie Dan Kinchla was the hero for Cohasset in that one, making several saves of the extraordinary variety.

In Saturday's re-match, Cohasset (5-7-1) again gave the Indians (12-0-1) all they could handle, keeping it a 1-0 well into the third period. However, they were outshot 34-6 this time around, as the Indians vaunted blueliners completely controlled the middle of the ice for much of the game.

So what makes Dennis Walsh, a veteran coach with more than 40 years of experience, more pleased

Young girls hoop team continues to battle

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It would be a shame if folks judged the Cohasset girls basketball program on their record of 1-14 alone, because these youngsters have remained up beat and hard working all season against considerable adversity, and these efforts have been reflected in the way they've stuck around in recent games against some very powerful squads.

Recently, Cohasset lost to Hanover 60-44, but it wasn't until late in the second half that the Lady Indians took control of the game.

"It was a tremendous first half," reported second year coach Ellen Carr, of the game that game that saw her girls go into the break with a 22 all tie.

For virtually the entire 32 minutes, the Lady Skippers were able to limit Hanover's impressive transition game. Only late in the contest, when Hanover started pulling away with timely shooting from the perimeter, was the win assured for the league opponent.

"We had worked very hard in stopping their running game," asserted Carr.

Another noteworthy defensive effort was turned in by sophomore small forward Lindsay Grossman, who matched up on Hanover's talented leading scorer Maureen Halloran.

"Lindsay did a tremendous job on man-to-man defense," enthused Carr. "She kept that girl to six points, and she usually scores in the twenties."

Grossman also led the way on the offensive side of the ball with 12 points, while sophomore power forward Maura O'Brien chipped in 10.

Sophomore point guard Laraine Langford tossed in nine points in the Hanover matchup, while also collecting a very impressive seven steals.

"Laraine has been doing a fine job," noted Carr. "She single-handedly breaks presses."

Last Friday, Cohasset lost to the Lady Lancers of Norton, 52-29, with Grossman and Langford again pacing the offense with 10 and seven points, respectively.

"It was disappointing," admitted Carr of the loss. "Offensively, we were taking very poor shots. That was our nemesis in both the Norton and Scituate games."

In that Scituate contest last Saturday, the Lady Skippers field goal percentage was in the 20's, greasing the skids for a lopsided Lady Sailors victory, 60-32.

Unfortunately, sophomore shooting guard Heather Peraino's 11 and Grossman's eight points were not nearly enough to overcome the Scituate attack.

Senior captain forward Katie Wenmark made a rare start against the rivals to the south, and performed well in her coach's eyes.

"Katie has been doing well, particularly because it is her senior year," said Carr. "She is so versatile. She just does not have the stats to show it."

Considering the relative youth and inexperience of her squad, with Wenmark being the only senior, Carr admits that she can not get too upset by the full loss column. ese does not blame her young squad for the losses.

"I have a feeling I have not prepared the players well enough to execute," she conceded. "Individually, we have some very good shooters, and I would like to see them score more."

Just over a week ago, the Lady Skippers were faced with a team that has epitomized excellence over the last few years in Abington. Not surprisingly, the Lady Skippers were jumped on pretty soundly, 83-27.

"We got smoked," stated Carr simply. "We played really scared. They are a powerhouse."

Britney Cheney led the onslaught for the Green Wave with 28 points, as Abington refused to let up until the final buzzer.

"Everyone on [Abington coach Mike Mayhew's] bench were all very strong," appraised Carr. "They did not let up for one minute."

Domintated by height and size in that game, as well as most others, freshman center Danielle Pinkus, the only one in her grade on the varsity team, has helped the Lady Skippers establish an inside game.

"I wish we could get the ball to her more often," said Carr. "She is developing a nice shot. She is very good at 12 foot jump shots."

With six games left in the season, and qualification for the state tourney clearly not a possibility, Carr continues to focus on the long term picture.

"We are going to hang tough and keep moving forward," the coach concluded.

and Cohasset-Norwell's Meredith Bixby tallied a 31.8 to take the fourth slot.

Scheiff, who believes Hart and Sheerin are head and shoulders above the rest of the conference's gymnasts, said the rivalry between the two pint-sized competitors is good for the sport and healthy for both athletes.

"It's good to see them go against each other," said Schleiff. "It gives both of them pressure for once."

Connerty said it was a new "flight series" that Sheerin worked into her beam routine, and performed flawlessly, that was the difference in the all-around results. Hart was hurt by the fact that her near-flawless routine wasn't long enough. Still, her 8.5 was surprisingly low, given her tremendous dismount. The muscular Gerrish, a powerful gymnast, finished third with a 7.8.

Cohasset's Kristin Sheerin, seen here performing her routine on the beam, won her personal battle with Hanover's top gymnast Kerianne Hart on Tuesday night, 35.1-35.05. Unfortunately, the rest of the Cohasset-Norwell squad wasn't so lucky, as they fell to the perfect 8-0 Hanover squad.

Hart edged out Sheerin on the bars, despite losing her balance on the dismount and winding up on the mat. Still, the degree of difficulty of Hart's routine was clearly present and she claimed the event with an 8.8 to Sheerin's 8.75. Gerrish earned her second third-place finish with a personal best, 8.45.

Next to Hart's beam dismount, the highlight of the meet was the spectacular tumbling runs Sheerin and Hart nailed during their respective floor exercises. Hart more than proved herself the consummate competitor by winning the event in a personal best of 9.02. Sheerin was equally as good, following in second at 9.0. Gerrish was third with an 8.5.

Bixby took fourth on the vault with an 8.15 to edge out Hanover's Tayva Martin (8.1). Hart was first with an 8.75 and Sheerin took second with an 8.55 score. Gerrish, steady the whole way through, was third in 8.35.

over this effort than the previous one?

"First of all, I think Hanover was ready for us this time," offered Walsh. "They really played a great game against us today. They are just so deep and talented and experienced, and they showed us that today. Their defensemen are just the best, and they dominated that game today.

"But I thought, defensively, we played them much better than we did last time. Last time, they were able to get away a lot of good shots and Dan had to stand on his head a few times to keep us in the game. This time out, I thought we limited them a lot more in what they were able to do offensively."

Cohasset defenseman Dan Morse (#7) pushes Hanover's leading scorer, Mike McNulty (#10), in Saturday's match-up with the powerhouse Indians.

Hanover got on the board just 2:25 into the game when captain Jason Ferris was able to knock home the rebound of a slap shot from Ryan Carr past the downed and powerless Kinchla.

The junior netminder and the young Cohasset defense pretty much shut the door after that, doing a solid job of keeping the front of the net clear and, for the most part, limiting the Indians to long shots .

With the Cohasset forwards unable to mount much of an attack and Hanover continuing to maintain a strong territorial edge, however, the backbreaker seemed inevitable, and it was finally delivered at 5:33 of the third period when freshman Jack Rafferty took a nice lead pass from linemate Jesse Ferraro to break in all alone down the left boards. He got Kinchla moving with a nice head and shoulders juke, opening up the pads enough for him to fire through a wrister.

The Rafferty line, which consists of all freshmen and serves as Hanover's third option, then took advantage of the understandably disheartened Skippers by taking the ensuing face-off right back into Cohasset's end. Kinchla stopped a quick wrister from Ferraro, but Rafferty was in perfect position to knock the rebound past the helpless Cohasset netminder.

On Friday, the Skippers notched a 6-2 non-league win over Foxboro. Kinchla stopped 12 shots to record the win, and his offensive support came from six different sources. Dave Bouchard, Matt Davis and John Durkin were among the goal scorers, and each added an assist.

This production reflected the balance Walsh has been trumpeting as the best hope for his team almost since day 1.

"I have three lines I can throw out there and expect pretty much the same thing," said Walsh. "Not a lot of high school coaches can say that."

Going into this week, the Skippers were being paced in scoring by sophomores Greg O'Connell (9 goals, 12 assists for 21 points) and Matt Davis (8-9—17). However, they'd also been getting steady punch from Chris Caron (7-8—15), Tom Anderson (7-5—12), Pete Whoriskey (7-3—10) and Bouchard (4-5—9).

The Skippers have seven games left, five of which they must win to qualify for the state tourney. They played Hull on Wednesday, who they tied in their first meeting. Three of the remaining games are against teams they beat the first time around in lopsided fashion (Norwell, Rockland and Foxboro), the other three against squads that got the better of them (Scituate, Trinity Catholic and South Boston), though the first two setbacks were one goal games.

Walsh sounds like a coach who believes his team should be in the post-season.

"We're a young team overall, but I think we've progressed to a point where we aren't going to be an easy match-up in the tourney," asserted the veteran bench walker. "And I definitely think we have the ability to win enough of these remaining games to make it in."

125 pounds, collecting two wins in the Cohasset Tournament over competitors from Whitman and Durfee.

"I am really pleased with his progress," said the coach.

At the 189 pound class, sophomore Braun Goodson has battled sickness all year, but performed very well against older, more experienced competition.

"He wrestles very well, and we hope to get his ready for sectionals," Sweeney appraised.

Sophomore Mike Casey has stepped into a varsity role this year at 160 pounds, performing up to Sweeney's high expectations.

First year wrestler Chris McKenna has progressed this year at 135 pounds. What he lacks in overall experience, Sweeney claims, he makes up for with instincts and terrific athleticism.

"He has a lot of athletic ability, but it is going to take him some time," said Sweeney, who then added, "next year, he will start winning some varsity matches."

Phil Strazzula is one of two freshmen on varsity, and is around .500 this year at the 112 pound class.

The other freshman on the varsity team is Ian Hickey, who has filled in for senior captain Justin Langham, out after suffering a slight concussion, at 140 pounds, a class Sweeney deemed "probably the toughest weight class in the area."

In addition to Langham being out, senior Antoine Miller is out for the season with a broken arm, and senior Bea Rankin has been fighting off a bad case of the flu all year. The maladies, while no plus to the team, have allowed some of the younger talent to see more varsity action than they otherwise might have.

"They have stepped in and learned a lot," affirmed Sweeney, who also raved about their enthusiasm for the sport. "When they are all healthy, they are ready to go. They are dedicated to doing well."

In addition to the freshman and sophomores, Sweeney has been very impressed with his 15 eighth graders, waiting for their chance to get into some varsity matches in coming years.

"[Middle school coach] Peter Buckley has done a fantastic job with the seventh and eighth graders," effused Sweeney.

Also, the captains— Langham, senior Dan Duffy and junior Dan Littauer— have definitely pitched in helping out the young members of the team.

With the 12 underclassmen, along with four juniors, and the 15 eighth graders waiting in the wings, Sweeney is ecstatic about the chance to have such a deep team.

"I have never had 23 kids before," said Sweeney of this year's total, as the Cohasset squad usually carries around 20. "But to have the depth, it will be just phenomenal."

Though Cohasset's varsity record stands at a sub-Cohasset wrestling standard 4-11, Sweeney knows that the best is yet to come.

"I am not the least bit concerned [about the record]," insisted Sweeney. "They are the future, and they are going to carry us. We show great promise."

Boys qualify for tourney

However, Cohasset was able to bounce right back from the loss to pounce on the visiting Warriors the next day.

"That is important," said Ford of his team's ability to play well just after a big loss; "that your team never goes into a long dip."

In fact, Cohasset has not lost two games in a row this season, and averages 76.5 points per game after a loss.

Three days before the Norton match-up, Cohasset beat league rival Hanover for the second time this year, with a 76-68 win.

"It was a real ugly game," conceded Ford. "But Hanover played one of the best games I have seen them play this year."

Cohasset next takes on Carver at home. With the Crusaders high scoring center, Tim Ryan, out for a few weeks due to injury, this game will provide Cohasset's only real hope of staying in the chase for first place.

Game Notes

Norton:

-Cohasset is now 1-4 on Fridays, 9-0 on every other day of the week.

-In the second half, Cohasset took eight free throws, missing their first four and making their last four. Norton attempted six, missing on the first three and connecting on the last three.

-All three Bilodeau brothers, Chris, Matt and TJ, threw at least one assist to a sibling.

-This was the only game Cohasset did not make a three pointer, going 0-3 from behind the arc.

-Neither team attempted a free throw in the second half until more than ten minutes in.

-Junior guard Liam Martin, nearly fully recovered from the rib injury he suffered the first time Cohasset played Norton, made his first start of the year.

Hanover:

-Cohasset scored its last six points on free throws.

-Senior tri-captain Erik Shea, held to two points on 0-of-7 shooting from the floor in the first half, scored 19 points in the second half on 6-of-7 shooting.

-Five different Skippers had at least one block in the first half: Lynner (two), Shea, TJ Bilodeau, junior point guard Matt Bilodeau, and freshman center Sean Connolly. None of them had blocks in the second half.

-Hanover shot 35 foul shots, a season high for a Cohasset opponent, while the Skippers themselves attempted 30, a season high.

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello everyone, Well, it is amazing to me to see that January has already come to a close. The events that closed it for myself and my family were not so great but definitely had a happy outcome. My little guy, Cody was hospitalized this past week and it really made me aware of how fast life goes in so many ways. Once the feeling of "emergency" had passed and he needed to be held and comforted, I was really in tune to just him and how so much of "life" is spent on rushing around, constantly hurrying up the kids or we will be late and failing to see and hear the "little things" that our children bring to us on a daily basis. As he was sitting in my arms, all snuggled up in his hospital bed, he looked up at me and said, "Mom, how long can you stay with me and hold me? Do you have to go anywhere or talk to anyone on the phone?" Well, needless to say, he stayed in my arms for hours and no one was going to take that away. Out of the mouths of babes took on a whole new meaning and really opened up my eyes. Take the time to listen to our children, hear the things they are saying about school and every now and then, stop all outside events, work and phone calls and enjoy your family. For me, it took a true emergency to show me this, from here on in, I hope to do it on a more regular basis.

I wanted to let everyone know from the sixth grade that there will be a Class of 2001, Deer Hill Yearbook. Start going through those photos from Camp Bournedale, the whale watch trip, band performances, the fifth-grade play and any other important, fun or memorable pictures that you would like to be included.

There is a box for photo collections in each sixth-grade classroom. Also needed are some students and parent volunteers to help with word processing, page setup and organization and small event fundraising(bake sales, raffles, etc.) For more information about what you can do to put this memory book together, please contact Susan Spofford(383-1680) or Sharon Daly(383-9293.)

Parents, as we all are well aware, strep throat, the flu and colds are running rampant. Please use common sense when deciding whether to send your child to school or not. Those doses of Tylenol, Motrin and whatever else, only ease symptoms for a few hours and do nothing to protect the germs from spreading to everyone else. Please encourage hand washing, good cough and sneezing techniques and use lots of cleanser. Children will get sick we know, but if all of us help to reduce the exposures of illness, it can only help in the long run.

The next Cohasset PAC meeting is scheduled to be held on Feb 7 at 7:30 in the Osgood Music Room. Tracy Hall, Director of the Lindamood-Bell clinic in Arlington will be the guest speaker at next month's meeting. Lindamood-Bell has pioneered programs to develop the sensory-cognitive processes that underlie reading, spelling, math, visual-motor skills, language comprehension, and critical thinking.

Ms. Hall will give an overview of the programs and explain how they are tailored to fit an individual's learning needs, as well as be available to answer questions. If you have any questions or further information, call Laura DeSisto at 383-6989 or Jamie Williams at 383-3075.

As the students change semesters, please remember to refresh all the supplies that are needed for school. At the Middle School, they have a school store where all the proceeds go directly to support Middle School activities. The more that you buy, the more the Middle School kids get for extra programs and fun activities. Call Mrs. McCarthy-Egan at 383-4205 for additional suggestions or to help with this great store!

Don't forget to get your tickets for the PSO St. Valentine Soiree, scheduled for Feb 10 at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham from 7-11 p.m. Light Appetizers and refreshments are available. Tickets are $40 per person or $75 per couple. Make sure to bring your ticket with you to receive a free drink. Tickets are available through all PSO Reps listed in the back of the school calendar or by calling Janeen Culhane at 383-2349.

The METCO program is looking for two host families for a seventh-grade girl and an eighth-grade boy. If you are interested hosting either of these students, please call Alison Moskow at 383-9242 or Olivia Baldwin at 383-1866 for additional information.

Make sure to all parents and students to check out the "Lost and Found" areas in all the schools. The pile gets bigger and bigger and you would be amazed at what gets found!

If you have a student who will be attending the Middle/High School for the next two school years,(2001-2003), you are eligible to serve on the Middle/High School Council. This council is comprised of the principal, teachers and parents, and community representatives. It is each council's charge to formulate and update the schools improvement plan and to identify and put into action missions and goals for each school. This year, there are openings for two parent representatives at the Middle/High School. Council members are elected by the parent body of the school and serve two-year terms. If you are interested in serving, please send your name and paragraph about yourself and why you would like to serve on the council to the PSO Nominating Committee, c/o Susan Biddle Jaffe, 10 Wood Way, Cohasset, MA 02025 or email her at SBJAffe@aol.com The deadline for candidate entries is February 12. Balloting will be held March 2-9, with the announcement of new council members to be made on March 20 at the monthly PSO meeting.

Thanks for reading this weeks column. Please send any school news, events or items to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com or ATSchoolsIn@aol.com, mail it to me at 622 CJC Highway or phone it in 923-1057. Talk to you next week

Selectmen put off signing Greenbush rail pact

table doesn't sufficiently compensate the town for the negative environmental impact the train will have on it. "We need the best possible compensation for our sacrifice," Dick said.

Ripley Road resident and right-of-way abutter Peter Pratt was critical over the lack of concrete language upholding the rights of abutters to resolve disputes over the amount of noise and vibration mitigation affecting them. "When the town signs the agreement [abutters] lose the leverage the town has," he said. Pratt was concerned with how enforceable the agreement would be if specific mitigation measures were not spelled out.

Dr. William Henry and Ann Musto, both of North Main Street, argued against the agreement in its entirety. Henry first argued against the financial wisdom of the $440 million project, and then said MBTA backing of a $1 million PWED grant isn't impressive. "With $1 million you can only do so much," he said. Later he argued, "The longer you delay signing, the better chance the project will die."

Musto said the town should "walk away" from the negotiating process, a statement that drew a positive murmur from the mainly anti-train crowd..

But Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan argued against the town just taking its ball and going home. Callahan, a fervent opponent of the train who didn't shy from taking shots at the MBTA all night, said it has been the long-standing feeling of the board that it has to act as if the train is coming, and protect the town properly.

Callahan said he knows this agreement isn't "perfect" but said both sides had to engage in give-and-take, and neither the MBTA nor the town of Cohasset got what it wanted. He also said though the majority of the board as individuals are against the train, there is a large portion of Cohasset that has been historically in favor of restoring the Greenbush commuter line.

"Historically, the town has been divided right down the middle," he said. "We're not getting an overwhelming mandate to stop the train."

A non-binding resolution at a special town meeting in 1994 gave the anti-train side a 52/48 percent margin, and a subsequent ballot vote was nearly tied.

Callahan also said the town could walk away but, "then the state puts the train down, and we get zero."

One of the main debating points at the hearing was the strategy involving the sale of the town-owned right-of-way. The town had twice last fall considered placing articles on special town meetings that would have asked residents to declare the right-of-way parkland. The benefit of the redesignation would have been that a two-thirds vote from both houses of the Legislature would have to approve the MBTA taking the land by eminent domain. It was taken off the warrant, said Callahan, because it was designed to use the right-of-way as leverage to get the MBTA to the negotiating table. When the second town meeting was scheduled in early November, talks had progressed so much, the town pulled the article off to maintain an appearance of negotiating in "good faith."

But some in attendance second guessed that strategy.

Pratt challenged the constitutionality of the legislation that authorizes the MBTA to take the right-of-way by eminent domain. However, both Callahan and MBTA counsel Robert Curry said, though it hasn't been challenged in court, the chance it would be struck down is slim.

Pratt also said he was in favor of forcing the Legislature to take a formal vote on the Greenbush issue. "If Garrett Bradley can stop it in the Legislature, I believe he will do that," he said.

"At least give it a chance," Dick added.

But whether the Legislature would block Greenbush was a point for debate. Bradley and Callahan reminded the crowd that Governor Paul Cellucci and powerful House Transportation Committee Chairman Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, want the train. Callahan said Sullivan actually "repudiated" the Braintree Board of Selectmen at a November meeting in the State House when the board came out against Greenbush. The one thing going for the Greenbush-corridor towns is that because of the project's high cost, the state's history of inflated capital projects and an economic downturn looming, the Legislature may be willing to cut such an expensive project.

Cellucci said in September that he wanted to impose a cap of $440 million on the project, said Michael Sullivan, "but he has totally backed off that since."

Dasey said the MBTA has just finished installing 62 miles of track in the Middleboro and Plymouth lines, they know what the costs are, and are confident they can come in at $440 million.

Musto said the town was cheating itself if it settled for a $1 million payment for the six-mile right-of-way. The right-of-way was assessed at $2 million, but Musto said that number doesn't take into account all the factors. "There's a value beyond real estate," she said of the land that she said has been considered a park by use, if not official name, for years by Cohasset residents. "We shouldn't just give it away. Don't sell the town short."

Predictably, comparisons to the $40 million deal Hingham received popped up.

"They got $1 million in Chapter 106 [historic preservation] money," said Spring Street resident Jody Butman. "Where's ours?"

Dacey said there is no such thing as "Chapter 106 money" and that the historic preservation fund set up the town was unique. "When we asked them [Hingham selectmen] what their number one priority was, they said protecting against unforeseen impacts to the historic district. Because we created the fund, that doesn't mean we need to create a fund for every district."

MBTA lawyer Curry said Hingham has the most dense section of historical properties along any railroad in the country.

Dasey continued that Hingham didn't get any money for flood control as Cohasset did.

However some residents reminded him Hingham "got a tunnel."

Callahan said to avoid comparing the two deals dollar-for-dollar. "There is a difference in concerns in the towns, and a difference and what the towns receive," he said.

Other issues raised in the hearing include:

- the 18-inch berm proposed outside the Strawberry Parfait that would prohibit left-hand turns into the store
- the steep grade down Pond Street leading to the grade-crossing
- lack of a sidewalk leading to the North Main Street access road to Cohasset station
- whether the proposed fencing around the tracks was sufficient to deter children from playing on the tracks

A North Main Street resident near the King Street/Forest Avenue intersection was concerned that the proposed stop light would turn a "quiet corner of Cohasset into Quincy."

Dacey said the MBTA would consider installing four-quad gates if the federal railroad authority rules them safe, and if they are "appropriate" for the specific grade-crossing.

Callahan said he had jotted down 21 areas of concern he planned on addressing with the MBTA. He also said the town and the MBTA were wrangling over some of the documents wording. He promised to hold another public hearing in the near future, despite Dasey's warning that the "train is leaving the station." Dasey also said he expects agreements to be reached with Scituate, Weymouth and Braintree within the next seven weeks. He hopes to have agreements with all the towns in place by the end of March.

Callahan said the hearing was informative because "we can't assume we've addressed every issue or to every degree. We need a fresh pair of eyes on this." He also said he doesn't consider any of the stuck negotiating points "insurmountable."

It quickly became clear at Tuesday's meeting that citizens wanted to know specifics, not just general abstracts.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested the MBTA come down for a day, fill a room with maps, and be available to answer any and all questions residents may have.

"I could arrange that with 48 hours notice," Dasey responded.

Town Manager Mark Haddad confirmed yesterday that Dasey kept his word and will be in town Tuesday to meet with abutters and discuss properties on an individual basis.

At the hearing, Dasey discussed the dispute resolution process that has been set up to deal with problems that arise between the town and the MBTA. He said both the town and the MBTA will appoint liaisons to act as direct go-betweens. The mitigation agreement states the two parties have to resolve any dispute within 48 hours. If it can't be resolved in that time frame, a majority of the Board of Selectmen will meet with the general manager of the MBTA and a representative of the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction and hammer out a deal within five days.

This dispute resolution process, said Dasey, will be available for homeowners, as well as the town in general.

But Dasey said he is confident there won't be many problems. "In Middleboro and Plymouth [the two active branches of the Old Colony commuter rail system] our mitigation estimates turned out to be very accurate," he said.

'New kid on the block' at chamber

Lilac House at the Red Lion Inn. She recited the chamber's mission statement, which looks to represent the interests of small businesses in Cohasset, and said to the 80 in attendance she hopes to expand the group's networking opportunities and increase volunteerism. The dinner featured National Federation of Independent Businesses state director Bill Vernon, who spoke of the group's lobbying effort on behalf of small businesses, both nationally and locally.

In an interview later, La Torraca said she and the new board of directors represent a new "transition" group, and called herself the "new kid in the block." She has been in town since just 1998, when she graduated from the New England School of Law, and opened up her own practice. Since that time, the board of directors has had a complete turnover. La Torraca herself is new to the chamber, going from member in 1999, to the board of directors in 2000, and now president.

"She has been serving on the board for the past year, and was instrumental working on number of different projects," said Drinkwater about La Torraca. "She demonstrated strong abilities to work well with people and is a very good consensus builder."

La Torraca said she wants to focus the chamber's activities on networking opportunities and bringing back old events, such as the auction, and Candidates Night, where candidates for town offices gather for questioning by the town's small businesses.

La Torraca said upcoming events include a networking reception at Conlon Family Chiropractic in Scituate, a golf tournament along with the Scituate Chamber of Commerce, and the annual Farmer's Market starting in June.

"We want to help businesses by doing networking," La Torraca said. "We help business owners meet each other and talk about their businesses."

She said parking around the village, a lack of space for new businesses and helping the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation that is trying to make infrastructure improvements to Cohasset Village are among the main issues affecting the chamber.

La Torraca grew up in Scituate and majored in English and history at Simmons College, graduating in 1992. She then got her master's degree in English in 1993, before enrolling in the New England School of Law in 1995.

"English is actually the best major to have for law school," La Torraca said. "Lawyers have to be able to read very well and write very well. That's why law school was easy for me. I was used to reading thousands of pages."

Her time in law school working for other one-person law firms grew her interest in owning her own practice when she passed the bar exam in 1998. Her desire to be her own boss, plus avoid the dreaded daily commute into Boston, also contributed a bit, she said.

She currently has two employees working for her, one paralegal, and one office helper, who started this past Monday.

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce is coming off a successful year, in terms of membership. The chamber now boasts 123 members, an increase of 19 over the previous year. However, La Torraca and Drinkwater said volunteerism in the organization is down. Between running the popular Farmer's Market on Cohasset Common, to organizing the fundraising and networking events, La Torraca said she hopes more businesses will lend a hand.

"Most of the work is concentrated in a handful of volunteers," said Drinkwater, who is a Realtor and partner with Coastal Countryside Properties. "You know what they say, many hands make light work."

Garden secrets

Dreaming of your summer garden? This winter, come and learn the secrets of successful perennial gardening. the South Shore Community Center is offering gardening classes to break the winter doldrums, and give all gardening enthusiasts a head start on spring planting. Succession of bloom, plant combinations, the placement of annuals, small trees and shrubs, design principles ease of maintenance, and local sources are just a sampling of what is covered in Ginny Ballou's popular six-week perennial gardening course which will start Thursday, March 1, for six weeks from 7 to 9 p.m. In this class you will earn hands-on planting as well as a slide/lecture and demonstration.

Ballou, who owns and operates Mrs. Blossom's Flower Company — a seasonal fresh cut flower operation — also designs perennial gardens, offers horticultural consultations and runs seasonal workshops in her Hersey Street gardens. Member of a number of professional horticultural organizations, Ballou has been teaching this course since 1992 Her lovely perennial gardens have been on a local tour. She also founded The Perennial Gardeners, a thriving local garden club.

Connecting people.

Five years ago, Town Online began building community town by town. As a virtual extension of your local community newspaper, we became the online source for local news and information. Now, with more than 100 communities online, we're ready to continue building community by connecting people to people and people to their communities.

A new and improved look.

We are ready to unveil a new and improved Town Online. The new expanded site will offer you the ability to search your town or region, easily navigate through the site and find exactly what you're looking for. While Town Online will continue to bring you up-to-the-minute local, regional and national news coverage, it will now be the go-to place for all that matters in your life. With a host of new features and personal options, you'll have "your world" at your fingertips.

Coming January 29

POLICE BRIEFS

Drug charges

Police arrested a Hull man on drug charges following a motor vehicle accident on Forest Avenue last Tuesday (Jan. 23).

Police were dispatched to the scene at about 7:55 a.m. and found a man and woman standing in the road next to two damaged motor vehicles.

The man approached police and claimed the female driver had pulled out in front of him and he couldn't stop. However, police said they determined the man, David J. Mitchell, 20, of 24 Central Ave. in Hull was under the influence due to his speech and appearance.

According to police, further investigation revealed a quantity of marijuana on his person, and police spotted a hypodermic needle thought to contain heroin on the rear floor of the motor vehicle.

Police charged Mitchell with OUI-drugs, failure to use caution, no driver's license in his possession, speeding, illegal possession of a Class A and Class D substance, and possession of an instrument to administer a controlled substance. Mitchell was arraigned on the charges Jan. 24 in Quincy District Court.

OUI arrest

Police arrested at 24-year-old Marshfield man at 11:45 p.m. on Super Bowl Sunday and charged him with operating under the influence of alcohol after he had allegedly been driving erratically through town.

An off-duty officer spotted the 1995 Mercury Cougar traveling "all over the road," according to the police report. The officer called dispatch and police subsequently stopped the car and arrested Matthew T. Tarmey, 24, of 7 Royal Dane Dr., Marshfield. Search at booking revealed a small plastic bag along with a piece of aluminum foil containing what police believed to be marijuana. Tarmey was charged with OUI, illegal possession of a Class D substance, red light violation, failure to stay within marked lanes and operating a MV without registration in possession. Tarmey was arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court.

SENIOR SCENE

Senior center volunteers sought

Cohasset Elder Affairs invites individuals to offer volunteer support services to elders.

The senior center counts on volunteers to make that special contribution of assisting elders to live in the most practically attainable comfort, dignity and independence.

Volunteers receive orientation, training and supervision in their area of interest. The commitment of time varies with each program.

1. Telephone reassurance — provides regular communication via telephone.

2. Nutrition volunteers — assist with on-site meals once or twice a week.

3. Office support — imputes computer data, assists with phone and transportation calls.

4. Companions — visit and advocate for elders who reside in their own homes.

5. Talents and skills — If you have a hobby/slides/music to share, please let the center know. The center is looking for new and interesting programs after its Tuesday lunches.

6. Join the board — People who are willing to serve on the board of directors are sought. Attendance is requested at a two- or three-hour meeting once a month during the day and assistance on one committee. Call the Rev. Gary A. Ritts at 383-0345 or 383-9112 if interested.

7. Mailing — People are needed to work on monthly mailings for Town Hall and for the newsletter which involves a commitment of three hours a month.

8. Drivers — for the local area, three hours, once a month. This service is covered by town insurance.

If you have a question, would like more information or would like to register, call the center at 383-9112.

Beatlemania, the ultimate tribute band will perform at Lombardos in Randolph Feb. 9.

Beatlemania is back

Tribute band makes South Shore tour stop Feb. 9

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

On Feb. 9, 1964, The Beatles appeared on The Ed Sullivan Show.

On Feb. 9, 2001, Beatlemania, the ultimate tribute band will appear at Lombardo's in Randolph.

While The Beatles "One" album continues to dominate the world-wide musical charts, the legendary Beatles cover band continues to pay homage to the Fab Four by touring around the country, playing the music that John, Paul, George and Ringo made famous.

"The Beatles were so big and so popular, and we're offering people a chance to re-live that moment in history."
-Stephen Sheridan of Beatlemania

But the band doesn't only play the memorable music of The Beatles. They recreate the magic of the group by looking like the Beatles, dressing like the Beatles, and sounding like the Beatles.

Beatlemania is always busy, as the band plays two to three shows per week. They've played all over the county — performing in Nebraska, Florida, Arizona, and California, and they've taken their act over seas too, performing concerts in Switzerland, Japan, Brazil, and Canada.

"We're always touring," said Stephen Sheridan, the guitarist of Beatlemania who recreates the character of John Lennon on stage. "And we're going to keep touring until we decide to sleep."

Beatlemania has been around since the early 1980s, but they have not lost touch with what they are doing even though some members of the band have changed over the years. They still love playing the music, they still love transforming themselves into the Beatles, and they frequently sell out their shows.

A tall tale

Boston Beanstalks celebrate being 'vertically endowed'

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Are you taller than average?

If so, there are a few beanstalks that want to talk to you—the Boston Beanstalks, that is.

The Boston Beanstalks are the local chapter in an international organization called Tall Clubs International. There are 64 other tall clubs within the organization located in various areas around the globe.

"Each club has its own name," said Plymouth resident Thomas Stadelmann, a member of the Beanstalks who boasts a healthy height of 6'2.

"Basically, the tall clubs were established as social clubs for support and camaraderie for people who are vertically endowed," Stadelmann added. "Our chapter (the Beanstalks) serves Massachusetts, but it also serves Rhode Island."

Stadelmann, a science professor at Massasoit Community College in Brockton, said there are about 150 members in the Beanstalks, 19 of which hail from the South Shore. But as each day goes by, membership continues to grow.

"Membership is constantly dynamic," Stadelmann said. "We have new members joining all the time."

The Beanstalks keep growing because they have a reputation for knowing how to have a good time.

"We party a lot," Stadelmann said with a smile. "And we'll start dancing whenever we can find a room to accommodate all of us. Any opportunity we can think of to socialize, we usually take it."

Stadelmann said the Beanstalks have celebrations for a host of holidays including Groundhog Day, movie nights every Wednesday, dances, "tea nights" at the Four Seasons Hotel in Boston, and even an annual national convention where all tall clubs from all over the world stand tall together. The convention is usually held in the United States—this year, it is being held in Maine.

"If we measure you, and you don't quite make the height requirement, we have a portable rack where we can stretch you out just a little bit."
-Boston Beanstalks member Thomas Stadelmann of Plymouth

Just last weekend, Beanstalk members held their annual beauty pageant where both a Mister and a Miss Tall Massachusetts was elected. The winners were Mark Sigrist, 6'6, of Brockton and Leeann Larson, 6'2, of Randolph. Stadelmann said he himself was elected as Mister Tall Massachusetts in 1999.

"It's just a beauty contest," Stadelmann said. "We don't take it too seriously, but we have a lot of fun with it." During

We're making

Beginning with next week's paper, readers will find some changes and new locations for our Living and South Shore Real Estate sections.

Living will now be incorporated into the main body of the newspaper, following sports. The section will not be printed separately, but it will continue to provide all the essential news and features readers have come to expect from Living — our comprehensive calendar of events and things to do on the South Shore; lively features in and around the arts and entertainment community; and our anchor columns such as Astral Week and Green Thumbs Up.

In an effort to further develop our position in the marketplace, South Shore Real Estate will now lead our community classifieds.com section. Our readers and advertisers will continue to find the latest stories on real estate news and trends, real estate transactions, mortgage line as well as a few new features such as open house listings and a Home Portrait focusing on a property currently for sale.

As always, we welcome your feedback. If you have further questions or comments, contact our living editor Alice Coyle at 837-4562 or real estate editor Paula Woodhull at 837-4569.

Different strokes for different folks

House hunters' preferences vary

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

Finding a community that is right for you and your family is as important, and in some cases, more so, than finding the right home.

For Kelli and Steven Burns, the parents of 3-year-old twin girls, the right community is first and foremost on their home buying wish list.

"What we're looking for is a good school district, a neighborhood with lots of small children, and a safe neighborhood, where the kids can ride their bikes. What the house looks like comes after that," said Kelli Burns.

"When we bought our first house, before the kids, we cared more about updated bathrooms than about a kid-friendly neighborhood. That changed after the twins were born," said Burns, who plans to put their Quincy four-bedroom Colonial on the market this spring.

"We love our house, but we're on a busy street and there aren't many kids close by. We know that we'll have to give up space and quality of home, but we figure it's worth it for us and the kids," she said.

The Burns family is not unusual, according to real estate brokers, who say many potential home buyers put community first.

Cindy Lowell of Century 21 Walker Brothers Realty in Duxbury said she often sees potential home buyers take a step down in a home to take a step up in a community.

"This is a quaint village town with a good school system, a private beach, a new library. It's very attractive to young families," said Lowell.

But it doesn't come cheap, of course. A three-bedroom single-family home in Duxbury can reach well into the $300,000 range.

While some of the basics — a good commute, a low crime rate and nearby shopping are universal, many other community attributes are subjective.

Some people want close neighbors, others want none. Some want a thriving downtown area, some want a more quiet, rural setting.

To find the community that's right for you, realtors advise thinking about these features, and more: tax rates; town recreation, distance to hospitals and medical facilities.

"Not everyone wants the idyllic village community," says Polly Hanlon of Conway Realty in Hull. "Sometimes people are looking for diversity, for an older community, for something a little funky," she said.

Forbidden fun

Broadway spoof comes to Company Theatre

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Since 1982, the musical revue "Forbidden Broadway" has entertained audiences by cleverly skewering some of the Great White Way's best known sacred cows. For Sharon native Danica Connors, who heads home to the South Shore next week with a touring production of "Forbidden Broadway" at Norwell's Company Theatre, the show's success is easy to understand.

"There has always been a great deal of mystique around theater," Connors explained from Los Angeles last week. "What 'Forbidden Broadway' does is allow audiences to see theater from a tremendously human perspective. Everybody makes mistakes and we can all laugh at them. The humor is the magic of this show."

Creator Gerard Alessandrini finds his inspiration in the songs of current and classic Broadway musicals to which he adds stinging original lyrics. Alessandrini also sharpens his satirical pencil on some of Broadway's biggest legends including Ethel Merman, Carol Channing, Barbra Streisand, Julie Andrews, Liza Minnelli, Michael Crawford, Patti Lupone, Kevin Kline and Chita Rivera. The material is regularly updated. The current incarnation takes aim at "The Lion King," "Ragtime," "Chicago," "The Phantom of the Opera," "Beauty and the Beast" and "The Music Man" while not overlooking staples like "Annie" and "Les Miserables". The lampooning of icons suits Connors just fine.

"I love singing the Ethel Merman roles, especially when she duets with the Phantom. Our 'Annie' is funny, too, because we have a 30-year-old woman in a too tight costume singing about "Tomorrow" while puffing away on a cigarette," says Connors. "It is great fun to spoof the performers and the shows. The things we poke fun at are often very true. It is all done in jest and with great honor."

Rounding out a four member cast are Mark David Kaplan, Kevin McGlynn and Kristine Zbornik.

"We change roles all the time. Nine out of 10 times when I walk in, I have to ask what I'm doing that day. It is great though because it keeps me on my toes and keeps the work fresh," says Connors. "We just all have to be very flexible."

Connors first joined "Forbidden Broadway" during its 1990's run at the Terrace Room of the Park Plaza and has been with it on and off ever since. A 1993 graduate of the Boston Conservatory, Connors was last seen in Boston two years ago in "Secrets Every Smart Traveler Should Know" at the Copley Theatre. Her regional theater credits include Sally Bowles in "Cabaret," Mary Magdalene in "Jesus Christ Superstar," and Mrs. Potiphar in "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat".

In the past year, she has appeared in workshop productions of the new musical based on the Louisa May Alcott novel "Little Women". The show had been scheduled for a pre-Broadway tryout at Boston's Wilbur Theatre last September, but that run was shelved when producers decided to make changes to the musical's creative team. Even with all the behind the scenes upheaval, Connors remains attached to the project.

"If 'Little Women' does actually happen then I may get to play the lead character, 'Jo,' at matinees. The character's similarities with my own personality make Jo ideal for who I am today. The new songs by Jason Howland are incredible. They are strong and passionate and written for a mixed belt voice which is what I have. The role really feels like it was meant for me."

With the future of "Little Women" still undetermined, Connors will continue with her current assignment which she credits with helping to build her confidence as a performer. "What makes this show great for performers is that it demands extreme flexibility and vocal power. You're never just in the chorus. You sing leads at every show. It has really helped me as a performer."

The show has also given Connors a renewed appreciation for the magic of live theater. "After seeing so many shows over the years, there just comes a time when you start to look at everything with a critical eye. With 'Forbidden Broadway' I am able to see Broadway shows in a much more positive light. It snaps me out of the critical mindset and just lets me enjoy things for what they are."

Connors believe that even casual theatergoers will also find pleasure in the show. "What is brilliant is that there are enough funny sight gags that the show works well even if the audience doesn't know every musical being spoofed."

("Forbidden Broadway" will be at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, February 7-11. For tickets and further information, visit the box office or call 781/871-2787.)

South Shore native Danica Connors has a role in the upcoming production of "Forbidden Broadway," on stage at Norwell's Company Theatre Feb. 7-11.

Geared up for gospel

Fifth annual musical celebration staged this weekend

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

For five years, the Company Theatre has joined with the New England area's finest gospel groups and choirs to "raise the roof" and "jolt the spirit." The occasion is for the annual Gospel Music Celebration, which the Norwell theater presents each year to celebrate Black History Month.

This year's Gospel Celebration event will be the fifth at the Company Theatre. It takes the stage this Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m.

The musical gala will once again showcase a wide and diverse array of gospel, spiritual and sacred music styles rooted in the African-American church and featuring a faithful gathering of some of the area's best vocal/musical assemblages available.

This year's performers include such groups as Juda and the All God's Children choir — both of whom are seen and heard regularly at the Morningstar Baptist Church in Boston — Love Divine and others.

The eternal motto of gospel music is, of course, to "lift every voice and sing." And the groups on the bill for this year's Company Theatre show will once more bring a stage full of voices to lift and stir the rafters. But in a concert setting, gospel music can always benefit from the presence of a vocal soloist or two. This weekend's celebration will in fact feature two soloists, including singer and sometime songwriter Micheal Saunders, of Randolph.

"The Company Theatre gospel show is a good annual production that brings together some of the best gospel groups in New England to celebrate the different aspects and types of gospel music, and what gospel has been," said Saunders. "This year is the first time that I've been involved in it."

"I attended the show for the last couple of years since I've got back into performing and recording myself and I enjoyed the spirit of the show so much that I really got interested in wanting to take part in it. So I sent a copy of my publicity kit, including a bio and my own independently produced CD, to (Company Theatre Artistic Director) Zoe Bradford, and just like that she gave me call to invite me on the bill this year," Saunders said.

Michael Saunders of Randolph will be one of the soloists in this weekend's big Gospel Musical Celebration at Norwell's Company Theatre.

Saunders said he will probably be singing three songs in his solo spot in this weekend's show. One or two of those will most likely spotlight tracks from the newly released independent CD, titled "Reconciled."

The disc's title bespeaks a profound return to musical roots for Saunders, who grew up in Boston and currently works on the staff at the May Center, a residential school for disabled children in Randolph. The singer began his musical career in gospel in the 1970s, singing first in his church choir, then forming his own gospel groups beginning at age 14. One of them, the Silverstars, played shows with major gospel artists such as the Winans, Shirley Caesar and Andre Crouch.

In the early 80s, Saunders diverted from gospel and moved toward a career in R&B and hip-hop, performing and recording first with the Boston-based band Essence, then solo under the moniker MYZZ. Working the contemporary urban-R&B genre through the early 90s, Saunders received strong local airplay and reviews with his smooth, resonant vocals and toured clubs and theatres up and down the east coast, sharing bills with modern soul/R&B singers such as Freddie Jackson, Melba Moore and Jeffrey Osborne.

In the last few years, Saunders has reunited himself with gospel, a move brought about by time and life circumstances. But his CD, which he describes as "a personal testimony" to Christ, does not exactly leave the R&B/hip-hop/pop influences behind. Songs written by Saunders and his keyboardist partner John Gibson with titles such as "I Worship You," "His Name Be Lifted" and "First Seek Your Face" are set to fresh, modern R&B, hip-hop and even Stevie Wonder-style, synth-textured production that would fit right into the mix on Boston's "new home of contemporary R&B/hip-hop" radio station WBOT-FM (97.7).

Said Saunders, "A lot of black music is old school R&B, blues and jazz all intermingled with gospel and the church. I see the whole style and production of my CD as just following the pattern of black music, and I can't really get away from all my earlier influences. I've just decided to sing about God and Jesus rather than love and hate."

This year's Gospel Celebration, like past shows, will feature spot performances from the groups and soloists involved, then conclude with all participants joining onstage for a climactic final number.

For tickets or more information on the Gospel Music Celebration call the Company Theatre at (781) 871-2787 or visit the website at WWW.companytheatre.com. The theater is located at 30 Accord Park Drive in Norwell.

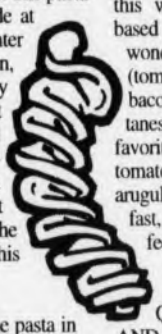
Pasta Perfect

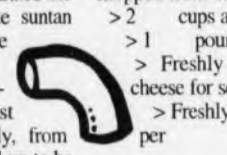
THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE



CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

In a small mountain village north of Rome, I was once served a simple dish of pasta with a sauce which had penetrated the pasta itself, flavoring it and bathing it with a silky salve of fruity olive oil, garlic, and herbs.

This was a far cry from the usual American spaghetti dinner -- a watery mound of pasta onto which is dumped an oily flow of tomato sauce. As we know, oil and water don't mix. I was also bothered by the comments of Italian friends who reprimanded me on the subject of the ratio of sauce to pasta. Although they insisted that a small amount of sauce goes a long way, I found that my attempts at lightly sauced pasta simply yielded underdressed, bland plates of spaghetti.



My first thought was to cook the pasta in the sauce itself, not in boiling water. Using a simple 10-minute tomato sauce, I added angel hair pasta with horrific results. The pasta was slimy on the outside at the point at which the center was cooked. In addition, the sauce was starchy from the pasta and it became very dry (dried pasta absorbs a lot of liquid during cooking). When I then added vast amounts of liquid to the pan to thin the sauce, this compromised its flavor.

Next, I tried starting the pasta in water and finishing it in the sauce. This method proved superior since the water rinsed off excess starch, the texture of the finished pasta was good, and the cooking water made the perfect liquid for thinning the sauce. Using fettuccine, I reduced the cooking time in water by one, three, five, and seven minutes, finishing the cooking in the sauce itself. When the pasta spent just a few minutes in the sauce, the results were disappointing. The noodles had not absorbed much flavor. When I precooked the pasta for only a couple of minutes, however, ended up with the same situation I had started with slimy pasta. Finally, I settled on cooking the pasta about half the time in boiling water and half in the sauce. This was perfection; the sauce penetrated the pasta and clung to it like suntan lotion. A little bit of sauce went a long way.

Now that I had tested fettuccine, I wanted to test other shapes. Surprisingly, from angel hair to fusili it ended up to be the same -- half the cooking time in water and half in sauce produced an amazingly flavorful piece of macaroni although the amount of cooking liquid which had to be added to the sauce varied. I also wanted to try this with other types of tomato based sauces. Meat sauces were wonderful as were an amatriciana (tomato sauce with pancetta or bacon) and a ragu although a puttanesca was less successful. My favorite, however, is still a quick tomato sauce with a handful or arugula thrown in near the end. It's fast, it's easy, and it marries perfectly with the pasta.

PERFECT PASTA WITH QUICK TOMATO SAUCE AND ARUGULA

The amount of pasta water you add to the sauce is variable. Just be sure to reserve two cups of cooking liquid before the pasta is drained. This approach is also very good with any meat sauce.

- 1 28 ounce can diced or whole tomatoes (not packed in puree) Muir Glen preferred
- 2 medium garlic cloves, peeled
- 3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
- 1/4 teaspoon sugar
- 1 1/2 teaspoons salt
- 2 tablespoons coarsely chopped fresh basil leaves
- 2 cups arugula leaves
- 1 pound pasta
- Freshly grated Parmesan cheese for serving
- Freshly ground black pepper

1. If using diced tomatoes go to step two. If using whole tomatoes, drain and reserve liquid. Dice tomatoes into about 1/4-inch pieces either by hand or food processor. Add enough liquid to yield 2 cups.

2. Process the garlic through a press (or mince with a knife) into a small bowl; stir in 1-teaspoon water. Heat 2 tablespoons olive oil and garlic in a very large skillet or sautÇ pan (at least 12 inches) over medium heat until fragrant but not browned, about 2 minutes. (If you do not have a pan large enough you can use the pasta cooking pot once it has been drained. Drain the pasta for only a few seconds and then hold in a bowl until needed.) Stir in the tomatoes and simmer until slightly thickened, about 10 minutes. Stir in the sugar and 1/2 teaspoon salt.

3. Meanwhile, cook pasta in 4 quarts of salted boiling water for half of the directed time. Drain pasta reserving 2 cups of cooking water. At this point the pasta has started to soften but still appears quite raw in the middle. Add the pasta to the skillet (or add the pasta and sauce back to the pasta pot in the absence of a large enough skillet) and complete cooking the pasta in the sauce adding reserved cooking water as needed to keep the sauce moist, stirring frequently. With two minutes cooking time remaining add the remaining olive oil, and salt as well as the basil and arugula and stir to combine. The pasta and sauce will likely look dryer than normal but will be moist and flavorful upon tasting. Serve immediately with freshly grated parmesan cheese.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31

Planetary influences turn around completely today, when the moon moves from fiery Aries to earthy Taurus. At 8:36 a.m. the Aries moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive until 9:21 a.m., when it enters Taurus. Zero in on projects that have been left hanging and finish them; handle routine chores, errands. A lunar alignment to Neptune makes this an evening to relax and unwind.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1

Mercury travels in retrograde motion during the month of February, making it a time for a change of pace and priorities. Rather than launching new ventures, plan to finish projects already begun; review, redo, repair. Artistic projects as well as jobs that require research or study also get the green light. Today Mercury moves into Pisces at 2:13 a.m. Mercury is slowing its rate of motion and will actually turn retrograde Saturday, February 3. The moon continues its travel in Taurus, prompting you to stay busy with practical projects. You can be most productive.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2

Astrological storm warnings are in effect today and throughout the weekend. Take it slow and easy. The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 5:31 a.m. The planet Venus moves into Aries at 2:14 p.m., remaining there until June 6. The moon enters Gemini at 3:56 p.m. and aligns with Jupiter at 6:14 p.m. Forget your troubles; relax and unwind this evening.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3

The sun forms a flowing 60-degree contact to Pluto at 8:06 a.m. This morning is prime for starting new diets, exercise regimens or programs to break bad habits. A polarity of Mars/Saturn also affects the day. Rather than trying to change others and transform external situations, this is a time to look within, change your thinking and find a new course of action for yourself. At 8:58 p.m. Mercury, standing at 1-degree Pisces, begins retrograde travel until February 25. A harmonious alignment of Venus/Jupiter highlights social and romantic activities this evening.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 4

The Gemini moon aligns with Uranus at 3:12 a.m. and becomes inactive until 7:00 p.m. If you have work projects to accomplish, handle a variety of tasks rather than one job. It may be difficult to focus and easy to overlook important details. This day is best, however, for relaxing and enjoying favorite sports, hobbies, friends. The moon enters domestic Cancer at 7:00 p.m., aligning with Mercury at 8:00 p.m. and Venus at 10:16 p.m. Share a special dinner with close friends/family.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5

Gear up for a hectic week. A full moon is building up and will culminate February 8, Thursday morning. The best way to channel its energy is to stay busy; tackle projects that have been left hanging and follow through. The moon travels in the sign Cancer today. Although it forms no major contacts to planets, it is active. Others may be moody, hypersensitive. Choose your words carefully. Plan a quiet evening. Look within, and you will find what you need to get back on track.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda today. Zero in on jobs that need repair, redoing; go on a cleanup campaign. The Cancer moon aligns with Saturn at 10:10 a.m. and Mars at 12:30 p.m., when it becomes inactive. The final windup to this month's full moon begins at 7:21 p.m., when the moon enters fiery Leo. A lunar alignment to Jupiter this evening prompts you to lighten up, mellow out.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7

This is a day that can go either way. The full moon buildup generates excitement, intensity. Don't be too hasty in your judgements or too eager to commit yourself. Slow down. Avoid mental, physical or emotional burnout. The planet Uranus plays an important role in this period, because it stands within two degrees of the full moon culmination point. Its influence may bring sudden, unexpected breakthroughs or breakdowns. Keep an open mind; go with the flow of things.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8

The full moon culminates at 2:12 a.m., 19 1/2-degrees of Leo/Aquarius. In addition, the planet Uranus aligns with the moon at 4:01 a.m. and with the sun tomorrow. This is a high energy, potentially stressful day. Be sure to take extra time out for yourself, to pursue activities that help you to relax. The Leo moon forms challenging alignments to Saturn, Mars and Mercury until 4:25 p.m., when it becomes inactive. At 6:35 p.m. a Virgo moon takes over.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9

The moon travels in Virgo all day. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Virgo, travels in retrograde and aligns with Mars at 9:59 p.m. In addition, the sun/Uranus alignment occurs at 7:20 a.m., and the moon and Pluto interact at 6:17 p.m. This is a volatile mixture of planetary energies. Don't make waves. Take your time and pay attention to details. Use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Channel high energy constructively.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10

After the barrage of planetary aspects in the past few days, influences calm down considerably this weekend. The moon continues active travel in Virgo until 3:18 p.m., reminding you that compliments will work better than criticism. This period is ideal for organizing, cleaning, getting your life in order. The moon enters Libra at 6:46 p.m. In addition, Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra forms a harmonious contact to Neptune this evening. Love is the name of the game. Sail the love boat to exotic ports.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 11

Today's influences bring a break in the stormy astrological weather we've been experiencing this month. This is a wonderful day to relax and recharge your batteries. Spend quality time with favorite friends; enjoy leisure activities. The moon travels in sociable Libra, forming contacts to Neptune, Venus and Pluto.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12

Alignments of the sun, Mercury and Saturn can make for a high stress day. The best way to channel this energy is to take on a big work project and stay busy. You can be most productive. The moon continues to travel in Libra and becomes inactive at 12:31 p.m. Mercury and the sun form 90-degree alignments to Saturn at 6:25 p.m. and 8:21 p.m. The sun and Mercury align at 7:17 p.m. All important signings, decisions are definitely off limits. The moon enters Scorpio at 9:51 p.m. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 13

Challenging planetary influences continue today and tomorrow. The moon travels in Scorpio, generating a serious mood. Others may be difficult to get along with, pensive, hypersensitive. Don't rock the boat in business or romance. Stay busy with work projects. You can get a lot accomplished. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Review your priorities and readjust your sights. Open your heart to higher visions.

Disclosure of inspection could have averted suit

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

The lesson is as ancient as the Book of Matthew in the Holy Bible: "The house fell not: For it was founded upon a rock. A foolish man ... built his house upon the sand."

If only Jonathan and Heidi White had reviewed the Book of Matthew before the 1998 purchase of the home at 28 Nardel Road, Newton, the Superior Court case of White vs. ABC Home Inspection, Otero & Pearl Associates and Milton and Evelyne Feinson might not have been filed.

Background

In 1991, Milton and Evelyne Feinson, the defendants, considered selling their home at 28 Nardel Road. Because of some foundation cracks, Barbara Diamond of Otero & Pearl, the broker, recommended Rene Mugnier, an engineer, to conduct a structural inspection. Mugnier reported that the foundation footings were not resting in good, undisturbed bearing soil and therefore were causing settlement, resulting in foundation cracks. Mugnier could not certify that the house had stopped settling. The Feinsons took the house off the market.

In 1998, the housing market heated up and to prepare the house for sale, Diamond prepared a fact sheet describing the house as a "meticulously maintained, nine-room ranch." The fact sheet was provided to the Whites, prospective buyers.

Surprisingly, even though Diamond knew of the Mugnier report, no mention was included in the fact sheet. Prior to making an offer, the Whites' broker asked Diamond if the house had "good bones." She replied that it did.

The Whites hired ABC Home Inspection to inspect the property and, upon receipt of a satisfactory inspection report, entered into a purchase-and-sale agreement (P&S).

The P&S contained various provisions, one of which stated that "the buyers acknowledged that they have had the property inspected by [a home inspector] and further acknowledge that the said home inspection was made by persons of buyers' own choosing ... and that they were satisfied with the results ... and accept the property in as is condition."

Finally, on Oct. 2, 1999, the Whites purchased the ill-fated home and moved in. Once in the house, the Whites became aware of the foundation problems and hired Mugnier to conduct an inspection. On May 18, 1999, Mugnier reported that the house had "significant and material foundation and structural problems." A structural engineer recommended that the house be demolished, which is exactly what the Whites did. The Whites ended up with a pile of rubble sitting on a house lot.

Anthony Summers

As you may guess the Whites sued everyone for everything. The complaint included counts for (1) breach of contact, (2) breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing (3) negligent misrepresentation, (4) intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress, (5) loss of use and enjoyment and (6) abuse of process. The defendants were the Feinsons, ABC Home Inspection, Barbara Diamond and Otero & Pearl.

Discussion of law

A review of the law, the facts, and the purchase-and-sale agreement convinced the court to grant summary judgment in favor of the Feinsons on all counts except for negligent misrepresentation. In order to establish that, the Whites "must be able to show that the Feinsons misrepresented material facts to them, which led the Whites to purchase the house. A special obligation of forthrightness is placed on the sellers of a house when potential buyers ask specific questions about matters within their knowledge. The Whites contended that when the Feinsons' broker, Diamond, agreed with (Whites') broker's assertion that the house had good bones, they reasonably understood that statement to refer to the foundation and overall structural soundness."

The Whites further focus on the fact sheet, prepared by Diamond, stating that the house was a "meticulously maintained nine-room ranch." The Feinsons were obviously aware of the findings of the 1991 Mugnier report. Once the Feinsons hired Diamond to represent them in the sale, they may have been negligent in not making Diamond aware of Mugnier's 1991 findings. Feinsons' awareness of the foundation problems can be imputed to their agent, Diamond, hired to sell the house. So, when Diamond confirmed that the house had good bones, the law will presume that Diamond, as Feinsons' agent, was aware of the foundation problems.

Legal advice

This case has yet to be tried. However, the only issue left to be decided is whether the Feinsons negligently misrepresented the condition of the house.

The Feinsons' exposure in this case is significant. They could possibly be liable for the entire value of the demolished house along with a variety of additional damages.

Different strokes for different folks

Frederika and William Richardi, both empty-nesters nearing retirement, recently bought a home in Hull.

"We wanted to live on the water, but didn't want to pay the prices of the waterfront homes" in the more expensive towns.

"We wouldn't be using the school system, so we didn't want to pay for a town that had a huge education budget shouldered by taxpayers," said William Richardi.

Hanlon said Hull is attractive to many different kinds of people because of what it offers: nearness to the water without sky-high home prices; 17 miles of shoreline; a charter school in town; lots of community services and transportation.

"The empty-nesters like Hull because they can have the beautiful water views" for less money than some coastal towns, she said.

"But if you do have children, Hull has a good school system and the plus of a charter school right here. Every single person with kids who is looking in town asks about it," she said.

The best way to find out if a community is right for you, though, is to spend time there, according to real estate experts.

Go into the local grocery store and post office; go to the parks and request permission to see the school. Talk to residents and subscribe to the local newspaper, experts recommend, to find out what the area's issues are.

You can also go to town hall to check out zoning regulations and plans for possible new developments. If you find that an expensive community is the right one for you, but you don't want to pay the price, experts recommend looking in neighboring towns.

"Look for towns where there is beginning to be more buyers than brokers. These are the up-and-coming towns," said Sarah McMichaels, and independent buyer-broker in Plymouth.

"Brokers know where they are. These are the places that could increase in value over the years as more and more people move in and the quality of life there could improve," she said.

Buyers also can consider a townhouse or condominium in a desired area or looking on the outskirts of the community, McMichaels advised.

According to Lowell, the real hallmark of a good community is how many people stay there.

"In Duxbury, you'll find that many people stay in town when they upgrade or down size. People are happy here," she said.

Grants available for energy bills

Consumer Guidance has established a grant fund to help people who are having financial problems because of high energy costs. This grant program is funded by private donations from corporations and private citizens who receive a tax exemption because of the organizations 501(c)3 non-profit status granted by the Internal Revenue Service.

"Many people who are struggling with energy bills do not know that financial assistance is available from non-profit organizations and from the government," says Alien Nichols, Executive Director of Consumer Guidance.

"We have established the Energy Help Grant Program and also publish a number of booklets to help consumers who are struggling with rising energy costs."

Consumers can receive a free grant application and more information about other financial help by calling 202-595-1035 or by visiting Consumer Guidance's Internet web site: www.ConsumerGuidance.org

Corporations or individuals who wish to contribute to Consumer Guidance's Energy Help Grant Program can send tax deductible contributions to: Consumer Guidance, P.O. Box 96051, Washington, DC 20090-6051.

Avoid 6 Costly Errors When Moving to a Larger Home and Save Thousands

A new report has just been released which identifies the 6 most common and costly mistakes that homebuyers make when moving to a larger home.

Unlike the experience of buying a first home, when you're looking to move-up, and already own a home, there are certain factors which can complicate the situation. It's very important for you to understand these issues before you list your home for sale.

Not only is there the issue of financing to consider, but you also have to sell your present home at exactly the right time in order to avoid either the financial burden of owning two homes, or, just as bad, the dilemma of having no place to live during the gap between closings.

In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "6 Inside Strategies to Avoid Trade-Up Mistakes."

These six strategies will help you make informed choices before you put your home on the market in anticipation of moving to a larger home.

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your copy of this FREE report, call 1-800-581-1081 and enter ID#12089. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Call NOW to find out what you need to know to make your move up to a larger home worry-free and without complications.

Bulman to lead Massachusetts Mortgage Association

Carol Bulman, president of Conway Financial Services, recently was elected to chair the Massachusetts Mortgage Association, the trade group of the mortgage brokerage industry.

Bulman, who lives in Scituate, is recognized as a leader in her field and has won the respect of her peers through her successful management of her business, her involvement in industry organizations, and her commitment to community service.

"This is an exciting time for our industry, and I'm looking forward to the challenges of the year ahead," Bulman said.

The MMA, headquartered in Wakefield, represents the interests of nearly 500 members across Massachusetts. The organization is the Bay State affiliate of the National Association of Mortgage Brokers and focuses on community service, education, and legislative issues facing the mortgage industry.

"The membership of the Massachusetts Mortgage Association is privileged to have the opportunity to grow and expand our services under the leadership of Carol Bulman during 2001," said MMA President James Dougherty. "Her extensive experience in the industry combines well with her commitment to raising the bar for all our members in pursuit of maintaining the highest possible ethical standards."

Bulman is a past co-chairperson of the Southeastern Massachusetts Credit Grantors' Legislative Committee, and also is a member of the South Shore Women's Business Network.

Her consumer handbook, "Mortgage Sense," is in its second printing of 10,000 copies. Bulman is past recipient of Boston Business Journal's "40 Under 40" award and the Providence College Career Achievement Award for 2000.

Conway Financial Services is the mortgage affiliate of Jack Conway & Co., the largest independently owned real estate firm in Massachusetts.

A recent meeting of the MMA Board of Directors was held at the Conway offices in Norwell. 2001 chairwoman Carol Bulman (center) presided over the session, whose attendees included President James Dougherty (to the right of Bulman), past chairman Howard Miselman (to the left of Bulman) and Jack Conway, chairman of Jack Conway & Co. (to the left of Miselman).

Sen. Marc Pacheco receives award

State Sen. Marc R. Pacheco

State Sen. Marc R. Pacheco will be named the Conway Country Citizen of the Year next month at the annual convention and trade show held by the Jack Conway & Co. real estate firm.

Pacheco was nominated for the award for his continued support of community preservation and development issues in Southeastern Massachusetts, said Chairman Jack Conway.

"Sen. Pacheco is committed to protecting the quality of life of our region," said Conway. "His vision and ideas for the future set him apart."

The Citizen of the Year award will be presented during the realty company's 14th annual convention and trade show, to be held Feb. 2 at the Holiday Inn in Taunton.

Pacheco is the founder and co-chairman of the Southeastern Massachusetts Legislative Caucus, a bipartisan group of legislators and community leaders that share the goal of fostering economic development. In addition, he is a member the Task Force on Growth and Change in Southeastern Massachusetts – known as Vision 2020.

Pacheco, a Taunton resident, also earned the award for his work on the recently enacted Community Preservation Act, which provides ways for cities and towns to raise funds for the protection of open space and historic structures.

Founded in 1957, Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. is the largest privately owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

First time homebuyer workshop set

Neighborhood Housing Services, an MHFA and HUD-approved First Time Homebuyer Counseling Agency, will be holding a free informational First Time Homebuyer's Workshop in partnership with Consolidated Mortgage Services. The partnership was established to better serve the needs of the local first time homebuyer. This workshop will be held on Saturday, Feb. 24 at the Roche Brothers Supermarket, second floor community room, 101 Falls Blvd., Quincy. The informational workshop will begin at 2 p.m. and continue until 4:30 p.m.

The agenda will be comprehensive as well as individualized. The focus will be on different aspects of the home-buying process, including how to locate a property within your budget, how to make an offer, and determining the best mortgage program for your needs.

Each participant will have the opportunity to meet individually with a mortgage professional. Participants will learn how they can purchase property with little or no money and how to best utilize local down payment and closing costs grants now available across the South Shore.

Advanced registration is required and space is limited. Please contact Carol Nemet at 617-479-1971 ext. 225 for more details and to register.

Homeowners alerted to money-saving mortgage information

Secretary of the Commonwealth William Francis Galvin has alerted homeowners who carry mortgages to watch their annual statements for information on how they may be able to discontinue private mortgage insurance (PMI).

Galvin, who has general superintendency over 14 of the Commonwealth's 21 Registries of Deeds, said, "Homeowners who have mortgages and carry private mortgage insurance will soon be getting either their escrow statement or a mortgage interest statement, Form 1098 which will contain a disclosure on how they can discontinue PMI for a savings of anywhere from $40 to $100 a month on their mortgage payments."

Those annual mortgage statements are due to be sent by the end of January.

The federal Homeowner Protection Act of 1998 required each mortgage lender to include the information on their annual statements, including an address and telephone number of the lender and information on the mortgagor's rights to cancel PMI.

"Lenders require you to insure your mortgage if your down payment on your home is less than 20 percent," Galvin said, "but once your equity in the home reaches 20 percent you are no longer required to carry that insurance. Many homeowners are unaware of this and they pay these premiums unnecessarily."

"Lenders require you to insure your mortgage if your down payment on your home is less than 20 percent," Galvin said, "but once your equity in the home reaches 20 percent you are no longer required to carry that insurance. Many homeowners are unaware of this and they pay these premiums unnecessarily."

Galvin has published a brochure "Private Mortgage Insurance and the New Federal Homeowner-Protection Act of 1998" which can be obtained by calling Citizen Information Service at the toll-free 1-800-392-6090 or by visiting the web site at www.state.ma.us/sec/cis.

Beatlemania is back

"We're always sold out in Boston," said bass-player Mac Ruffing, who plays the character of Paul McCartney. For authenticity sake, Ruffing who is right-handed taught himself to play guitar with his left hand, just as McCartney does.

"We have a really good time when we play, and people just love the music of The Beatles. The other members of Beatlemania include John Preston (drums, Ringo Starr) and David John (guitar, George Harrison).

Sheridan said he and his band mates are thrilled that the Beatles — who broke up more than three decades ago following the release of "Let It Be" — are once again topping the music charts with One, a compilation of the band's 27 number one songs.

"It takes some great music to be number one 30 years later," Sheridan said. "The show we put on is totally authentic in terms of the music, the costumes, and the instruments." Sheridan said the only exception to that rule is the fact that Beatlemania doesn't use some of the more "exotic" instruments The Beatles used on some of their tunes, such as the "sitar," used on songs like "Norwegian Wood." Instead, such instruments are recreated through synthesizers.

Beatlemania takes the audience on a journey through the Beatles' musical history.

"We put on a full theatrical performance," Ruffing said. "It's not just four guys in a rock band impersonating The Beatles. We portray them visually and musically."

Ruffing said Beatlemania starts performances by dressing and playing music like the Beatles did in the early years. The show then progresses to the later years—with the group donning Sgt. Pepper's garb and performing the music from the Beatles' later albums. As the show goes on, the members of Beatlemania "grow (their) hair out," and recreate the members of The Beatles in their final years as a band.

"We try to capture their personalities as well," Sheridan said. "It's definitely a lot of fun. We're all big Beatles fans, so for us, this isn't really like going to work. When the curtain opens at a given show, people seem to get visually interested with the whole thing. We always hear things from the audience like 'Wow! That really looks like them!' I think part of the reason people come to see us is because of nostalgia. The Beatles were so big and so popular, and we're offering people a chance to re-live that moment in history."

"I love all The Beatles music," Ruffing said. "I love being able to rock out on the early classics during one of our shows, but I also love playing their more sophisticated music. The show is like a mini-event, and there's never a dead moment."

"A lot of people don't think about it," Sheridan said, "but the Beatles were just really cool. They could play anything. The 'White Album' was like some kind of freak out, man."

Recreating the music and the men behind it is no easy task.

"We've probably done a lifetime's worth of research on them," Sheridan said. "We watch videos, listen to the records, and read books about them. It's really about being obsessed."

Of course, the members of Beatlemania feel the Beatles have influenced every rock band that followed them.

"If it's Rock 'n' Roll," Ruffing said, "you can usually trace it back to The Beatles. It's impossible to imagine what music would've been like without them. All the other bands who came out during the 70s incorporated the music of The Beatles into their work—bands like Led Zeppelin, Pink Floyd, Nirvana—it all comes from The Beatles."

"The Beatles in their time were timeless," Sheridan said. "They are still the most timeless group in popular music. They still rule the radio, and every other kind of (modern rock) music flows out of what they did."

"Our show is basically a two-hour party," Ruffing added. "It's a happy experience, and you're bound leave the show with a smile on your face. It will also bring back some great memories for those people who lived in the era of the Beatles. We feel very lucky to be able to do this."

For tickets to the Beatlemania show at Lombardo's in Randolph, call Ticketmaster at (617) 931-2000 or log onto the website at www.ticketmaster.com. The show begins at 8 p.m. on Feb. 9. Tickets are $22, and are also available at Filene's, Tower Records, and HMV record stores around the area.

Boston Beanstalks celebrate being 'vertically endowed'

the course of the competition, contestants are subjected to various questions by a board of judges — contestants are judged on looks and smarts.

Despite no official meeting place, the 150 members of the Boston Beanstalks manage to keep in touch with each other. The Internet helps them reach out to one another.

"We have a web page, and we also have a newsletter we send out to keep people informed on different events," Stadelmann explained. "We all manage to keep in touch."

To become a full-fledged member of the Beanstalks, one must undergo an initiation, Stadelmann said.

"The first time someone comes to a (Beanstalks) event, and they say they want to join the club, they are measured right there on the spot," Stadelmann said. "We have an official measuring guy."

Stadelmann said for men who want to join the club, a minimum height of 6'2 is required. For women, the height requirement is 5'10. He said the tallest person in the club is 6'9. All members must be 21 or older.

"If we measure you, and you don't quite make the height requirement, we have a portable rack where we can stretch you out just a little bit," Stadelmann added humorously. "But don't worry if you're not tall enough to join the club. You don't have to be a member to enjoy our company."

And you don't have to be a member of the Beanstalks to appreciate its charitable efforts. Stadelmann said some events which the Beanstalks initiate are on behalf of the group's favorite charity, the Marfan Organization.

"Marfan is a connective-tissue disease that affects people who are tall," Stadelmann said. "The disease can really have an impact on the heart."

Stadelmann said the Beanstalks also provide certain "scholarship support for tall young men and women."

"Besides just providing camaraderie and socialization, we really believe on actually supporting one another," Stadelmann said of the Beanstalks.

"This is by far the most active group of individuals I've ever been associated with," Stadelmann said. 'And we're made up of all kinds of people—engineers, Real Estate people, teachers, computer people, construction workers—you name it. And our members are all fun-loving people, and good-natured. If you have a chip on your shoulder, we don't want you."

For more information on the Boston Beanstalks, call (617) HUB-TALL. For information on other tall clubs around the country and around the globe, log onto www.hubtall.org.

Cruise line offers guarantee

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I've never taken a cruise, and I think I'd hate it, but my wife wants to try one. I read somewhere about a cruise line that offers a money-back guarantee. If you hate the cruise, they'll let you off at the first port of call and give you your money back.

What cruise line is that and do they still offer the money-back offer?

A. As far as I know, Carnival is the only cruise line offering a money-back guarantee. If you are not completely satisfied with your vacation experience, all you need to do is notify them before arrival at the first port of call and you may disembark at your ship's first non-U.S. port of call. Carnival will refund the unused portion of your cruise fare and pay for your flight back.

In addition, Travel Services International, the world's largest retailer of cruises, offers a guarantee to vacationers who book cruises through its retail units, including Cruises Only, CruiseMasters, The Cruise Line Inc., CruiseOne, Cruises Inc. and mytravelco.com if purchased from Jan. 1 to March 31, 2001.

The satisfaction guarantee gives customers 24 hours to test the waters. If there's a problem, the cruise line will try to satisfy the client. However, if the matter cannot be resolved, TSI will make arrangements to have the client disembark, fly them back to the port of embarkation and refund the unused portion of the cruise.

Full details of the program are available at www.mytravelco.com or through the reservation centers at (800) CRUISES.

Q. I plan to visit Asia this year, and am looking for a good deal on airfare. I'd like to include Tokyo, Hong Kong, and Bangkok. Where can I get the best deal?

A. By far, the best value in travel to and throughout Asia is Cathay Pacific's All Asia Pass. The pass is priced at $1,199.00 per person, not including U.S. and foreign taxes and fees. A $100 discount is available to students (age 24 and below with valid, student ID), seniors (age 55 and above with proof of age), and children under 12.

A $200 discount is available to registered Cathay Pacific CyberTravelers and up to three accompanying guests traveling on identical itineraries, bringing the cost down to $999.

The basic All Asia Pass includes round-trip economy-class air between either New York, San Francisco or Los Angeles and Hong Kong. From there, unlimited travel between Hong Kong and any or all of the following qualifying destinations is included: Bangkok, Cebu, Denpasar (Bali), Fukuoka, Jakarta, Karachi, Kuala Lumpur, Manila, Nagoya, Osaka, Penang, Seoul, Singapore, Surabaya, Taipei, Tokyo.

The pass is valid for 21 consecutive days, beginning the day you arrive in Hong Kong. Travel is available Sunday to Thursday only, with a $100 surcharge each way for weekend travel. The pass is valid in 2001 from Feb. 12 through May 13, and Aug. 14 through Dec. 5; and in 2002 from Feb. 25 through May 12 or Aug. 13 through Dec 4.

Travel during the summer period (May 14 through Aug. 13, 2001, or May 13 through Aug. 12, 2002) is also available for an additional $300, as are add-ons to other cities in Sri Lanka, India, Vietnam, China, Australia and New Zealand. And, you can extend the validity of the pass from 21 to 30 days up to 90 days for an extra $100 to $350. A business-class upgrade is also available for $1,099 each way, still far less than you'd normally pay.

Complete rules and restrictions about the All Asia Pass are available at www.cathay-usa.com, but you can only purchase it through a travel agent.

Green thumbs up

Suzanne Mahler
Part 2

As the chilly, steel gray days of January pass slowly by, the winter seems to creep along endlessly for those who yearn to till the soil. Despite the loveliness of our recent snowfall, the dormant winter landscape offers only, a pen and ink sketch of the secret beauty hidden beneath Old Man Winter's snowy white blanket. We long for Mother Nature's kaleidoscopic art work of multicolored flowers, splashed against a soft green grass canvas, the sweet perfume of springtime blossoms and singing birds. Colorful catalogs and magazines help to alleviate these dull, dreary weeks but only the arrival of spring and the cultivation of our sod will fulfill our need to grow and nurture our gardens.

Despite the loveliness of our recent snowfall, the dormant winter landscape offers only, a pen and ink sketch of the secret beauty hidden beneath Old Man Winter's snowy white blanket.

Several days of slightly milder temperatures afforded a welcome opportunity to escape the dry, stuffy confines of the house and breathe in the exhilarating fresh air outdoors. As the afternoon sun reflected off the snow's slowly shrinking, crystalline surface, its warmth and intensity offered the promise of spring's arrival and the rebirth of our landscapes. February is a time of great anticipation for most gardeners. There will most likely be many more wintry days before the arrival of prolonged springtime warmth, but Mother Nature is sure to tease us with hints of spring in the days to come.

In preparation for spring's arrival, the time has come to assemble our supplies for starting seeds. While the majority of my seeds come from catalog sources, I make an effort each season to collect several types from my own garden. Cleome, poppies, columbines (Aquilegia), balloon flower (Platycodon), and angel's trumpet (Datura) are just a few of the seeds tucked away in canisters each fall. In addition, daylily seeds, which are the result of personal hybridization efforts, have been labeled and refrigerated, awaiting sufficient time to initiate the germination process.

Seeds purchased from outside sources should note each seed's requirements on the back of the packet but a reference book on seed propagation is helpful to ensure success. Two references I keep handy are Park's Success with Seeds published by the Park Seed Company and Seed Sowing and Saving by Carole B. Turner. These books contain valuable information on seed viability, germination times, temperature and light requirements and special treatments which may be required for certain varieties.

Seed-starting supplies are readily acquired locally and should include containers, growing medium, labels, a spray bottle and/or a watering can and possibly some form of heating cable or warming mat to supply bottom heat for seeds that require warmer temperatures for germination. Large, clear plastic bags or seed-starting kits with plastic domes are advantageous.

The most important aspect of successfully sowing seeds indoors is to purchase a suitable growing medium. The ideal medium for starting seeds is a sterile, soilless mixture of peat, perlite and/or vermiculite.

Should you lack brightly lit, sunny exposures inside your home, grow lights or a fluorescent light fixture may be necessary to provide supplemental light essential for strong, stocky growth. A liquid soluble fertilizer should be purchased to provide dilute feedings once seedlings are actively growing to ensure husky, robust plants.

A wide range of containers can be utilized for seed-starting, the only major requirement being that the containers have drainage holes. Flats or pots approximately 2 1/2 inches to 3 inches deep are ideal as they provide adequate room for root growth and prevent drying out. I like to clean and recycle the plastic flats I accumulate each season when I buy my annual plants from our local nurseries. Large trays with individual cells for each seed can be purchased with or without growing medium which are ideal for sowing larger seeds; I prefer those which are empty as the starting medium may contain mostly peat which is often difficult to moisten properly.

Peat pots and peat pellets, containers prepared from compressed peat moss, are yet another means of starting seeds and are especially useful for starting plants which resent transplanting since the seedlings are transferred directly into the ground, intact. Poppies, squash and cucumbers are just a few of the seeds which might benefit from being sown in these containers. Seedlings must be carefully monitored as the peat is prone to drying out quickly, especially once the plants' root systems become well developed.

The most important aspect of successfully sowing seeds indoors is to purchase a suitable growing medium. The ideal medium for starting seeds is a sterile, soilless mixture of peat, perlite and/or vermiculite. Purchase ready-made mixes formulated for growing seeds such as Jiffy Mix or Metro Mix for best results. Avoid using garden soil. Even many sterile potting soils tend to be too heavy far sowing seeds unless additional peat and perlite are added to create a light, airy, porous mixture.

Once the essential supplies and seed packets have been acquired, carefully read the instructions on the back of the seed packets or consult catalogs and books to enable you to prepare a timetable for starting your seeds. Be sure to date your seed packets if they have not been stamped with the year of production. Do not start seeds earlier than recommended. Perennials tend to grow more slowly and can be started up to 12 week before the last frost. Most annuals and vegetables should wait until six to eight weeks prior to Memorial Day to be sown. Seedlings are best transplanted to their final location before they are budded or flowering. Very little is gained and much can be lost by sowing seeds too early or rushing to transfer seedlings into the ground.

Cohasset Village provides the perfect backdrop for Mary Jeanette Murray, who was born in town, and is being honored for her many years of public service with the Citizen of the Year Award.

'Sharing a lifetime of blessings'

Murray is named Citizen of the Year

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Contrary to common belief Mary Jeanette Murray did not get her sky blue eyes from her Irish Catholic mother but from her Jewish father.

Today those iridescent eyes well with tears more often as she reflects on her many "blessings" including a lifetime of service to her hometown, first as den mother and Little League mother and Girl Scout leader and then as selectman and state representative. But more importantly, the 76-year-old — who is today a Cohasset institution — feels fortunate to have a big, loving family and countless dear friends in her corner.

"She has the unique gift for meeting people, and helping in any way needed."

"Mary Jeanette Murray is an outstanding person and wonderful mother and family woman," says Alfred Odermatt, 2 Todd Lane. "She has the unique gift for meeting people, and helping in any way needed."

For her many years of dedicated public service and undying loyalty to her constituents, Murray has been named the Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year. This is the eighth consecutive year the newspaper has sponsored the local award.

Union says board won't back cops

Staffing is key issue

By Mary Ford and Rick Collins
MFORD@CNC.COM

A rift between selectmen and the Cohasset Police Department that had apparently been bubbling just below the surface for some time reached a full boil this week. The patrolman's union sent the board a lengthy letter claiming certain members of the board of selectmen don't support the police — a situation they say has affected morale and may be compromising the level of service the police can provide the community.

Lack of manpower, criticism over a request for new firearms and an outright anti-law enforcement stance by certain board members actions and words were reasons listed in the letter written by union president Officer William Quigley.

"We're operating right on the edge constantly. The bottom line is I could use three to four officers in a heartbeat to make this department run the way it should."
— Police Chief Brian Noonan

Police Chief Brian Noonan said three officers are currently out on disability, a factor that is adding stress to the 17-officer department. Greg Lennon and Rick Grassie, have been pulled off the detective beat and put back in uniform to fill the gap. That means the town is currently operating without any investigative services, he said. The police contract requires minimum manning of three officers on duty — or nine a day to cover all shifts.

"Ideally four people is a good crew," Noonan said.

Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan, who is troubled by the tone of the letter, said he does not agree that selectmen don't support the police. He said the issue is budgetary.

"We have policy differences on how much we should spend on the police department," he said. "Every department wants us to spend more money."

But Selectman Michael Sullivan said problems with the police go deeper than the budget. He said different members of the board brought their concerns over the way youth arrests were handled to police last fall. While he doesn't condone underage drinking or breaking the law, he feels police are being too tough on first-time offenders who are cuffed, booked and put in a jail cell.

"Discretion is appropriate at different times rather than have a hard and fast rule," Sullivan said. He explained that some youths might be in a car or at a party and not be involved with the drinking but are arrested along with everyone else.

"Parents have called me and said it is getting out of hand," he said.

Sullivan said he raised the issue months before an incident involving a member of his family on New Year's Eve.

"There's a way to protect the public and build rapport and respect rather than divisiveness," Sullivan

$10.2M budget to be voted

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A public hearing will be held tonight to discuss the Cohasset School Committee's proposed $10.175 million fiscal year 2002 budget, that includes money for five new teachers, additional music and art instruction and reinstating the middle school's "no-cut" sports policy.

The budget is a $600,000 increase over the current fiscal year 2001 budget, but has $780,000 in additional spending. The extra $180,000 is being reallocated from this year's maintenance budget to other areas. The town took school maintenance this past summer.

The public hearing at 7:30 p.m. tonight at the middle-high school will be the last chance residents have to comment on the budget before the March 31 annual Town Meeting, when it is presented as part of the town's operating budget. The school committee does intend to vote on the budget at the end of the public hearing.

"I think it looks great," said school committee member Mark DeGiacomo. "It works for me."

"Now is the time to ask questions about the budget. This is the drop-dead final discussion date."
— Stephanie Noble, school committee

"Now's the time to ask questions about the budget," added member Stephanie Noble. "This is the drop-dead final discussion date."

Of the $600,000 increase, $313,250 is committed in salary increases for the department's employees.

Another $202,690 will be spent on four new middle school teachers, and a third-grade teacher at the Osgood School. Committee member Rick Flynn said these costs are due to the increase in student enrollment in Cohasset schools. "People have to understand the frustration of what's going on this year," he said. Class size in the middle school has topped 30 students in some classes this year, and will average in the 30's next year without the new teachers, school principal Dr. Michael Jones has told the school committee. "We're trying to correct this problem, and now people have to do their part, and follow through and vote for it," Flynn said.

The Deer Hill and Osgood will also receive a $42,000 jump in fund-

New Mill River Marine Railway site plan raises harbor issues

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

On one hand, it could potentially help the businesses already on the site. However, it could also exacerbate the parking problem along the harbor area.

The new plan for the Mill River Marine Railway site is just a month old, but ready to cause a stir. The issue combines some of Cohasset's most controversial topics — harbor access, parking problems, the town's small commercial tax base, preservation of historic properties and wealthy businessman Peter Roy – and throws them all into one big package.

On the slate is the renovation of the dilapidated, yet revered Mill River Marine Railway site, which houses a boatyard and repair shop, the Cohasset Lobster Pound, and Cohasset's "Motif No.1," the storage building used in the feature film 'Witches of Eastwick.'

The new plan being proposed by Roy, the site's new owner, would tear down all the structures on the site, except for the Lobster Pound, and the Eastwick building – as it's known to some – and replace them with a new main three-story boat repair shop with two apartments upstairs, a kayak sales and rental shop and an expanded deck area. Also, the plan would renovate the Eastwick building, which is currently threatening to fall into the Gulf River, including a new residential unit on the second floor, add a public launch for canoes and kayaks into the river, and improve the existing railway system.

Roy purchased the property from William Hanney in 1999, after Hanney fought to turn the majority of the site into residences.

The plan has already won one minor victory. Since Hanney had already began the permitting process, the new project's engineers, CLE Engineering, asked the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs not to require a new Environmental Impact Report. CLE Project Manager Susan Nilson said late last month, the EOEA did just that, allowing the project to proceed to the Department of Environmental Protection and local boards for permitting.

For one person that will be directly affected by the renovation and shuffling of buildings, the project could be a godsend.

"I'll have more space," said Frank Carey, who operates the boatyard. The boatman has been repairing and restoring boats at the site for 31 years, and said he was no fan of the plan proposed by Hanney. "There's a lot more water dependent use than the other owner's plan."

During the winter, Carey said his business is partially supported by renting space to store boats for the winter, and the plan, as it has been presented to him, would provide him for room for boat storage. Also, the renovation of the buildings he leases from Roy allow him more time for his craft.

"These buildings need a lot of work," he said standing in his cavernous main repair shop. "They really need to shore up the mill."

Though the main part of the mill — the Eastwick building — is usable, thanks to many hours of repairs by Carey, a drive across the Border Street Bridge will show that the rear of the building appears ready to fall into the tidal river beneath.

"I spend half of my time just maintaining the place," he said. Carey also said the renovated rail system would make it "easier" to pull boats out of the water.

However the plan wasn't approved by the EOEA without a warning for more waterfront access, and an improved parking plan.

"The current plan is weak on providing public access to the waterfront," said a report from the EOEA office. "In addition, the project fails to provide sufficient parking for the uses proposed."

Those are the main problems with the plan say some Border Street residents.

"The access [to public docks] because of the activity in the summer time, is quite restrictive. There is no place for a resident to come from Sohier Street with his canoe on top of his car or trailing a boat, and put it in," said Richard Karoff. "We now have a business being proposed [the kayak shop] and people of course have to get there, they're not going to walk from Boston, or wherever they come from. They have to put a car somewhere."

Karoff and seven other harbor-area residents sent a letter to the EOEA, critical of the proposed plan. "The patrons and employees of the Roy businesses [Atlantica, Olde Salt house, Kimball's By the Sea] compete for limited street parking which are needed by the general public including Cohasset residents to gain access to the harbor," the letter said. "In the event permission is granted to change the use of 82 Border St. [the Mill River Marine Railway site[, we do request off-site, non-public parking away from the harbor and river."

Karoff said that he just wants Roy, who owns just about all non-public land along the Harbor, to create and adhere to a better parking plan for his businesses' patrons and employees.

The EOEA heard the complaint and addressed it in its decision on the EIR. "[The state] understands that the proponent owns several parcels in the waterfront area," it said. "It may be possible to develop a parking plan to serve the area." The state also acknowledged the work of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation to enhance the harbor and village area and suggested Roy, a prime backer of the CRC, "work with these partners to improve pedestrian and vehicular access for the shipyard area."

Snow, ice budget

Due to a recent rash of cold and snowy days, Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield has asked for permission to exceed the department's snow and ice removal budget.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Tuesday night that the department has already almost used up its $50,000 budget, with more than a month of winter left.

Selectmen unanimously approved the extra funds, which now awaits approval from the town Advisory Committee.

Fire department grant awarded

The Cohasset Fire Department was awarded a $20,819 grant from the state Executive Office of Public Safety, to be used towards the purchase of thermal imaging cameras and other fire safety equipment.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the money, when added to the amount the fire department has raised already, should be enough to purchase the camera. He said cameras cost approximately $35,000.

Senior housing

The town Senior Housing Committee had been eyeing a parcel of land on Route 3A between the Rose Hill development and Jonathan Livingston Seagull plaza as a potential site to construct senior housing.

However, Paul Shea, the town's conservation agent, has nixed the idea, saying though it would be possible to install a septic system, there is no way a developer could squeeze a building and parking lot onto the site without coming within 100 feet of the wetlands. Town Manager Mark Haddad broke the news to selectmen at a recent meeting.

"I told you so," poked Selectman Merle Brown, who for months has been saying the area was "too wet" for development.

Heart Health Month

The Social Service League and the Cohasset Board of Health will offer a free cholesterol and blood sugar screening Thursday, Feb. 15, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church for all residents.

Celebrate Heart Health Month by taking advantage of this free cholesterol screening in February. A simple finger stick test will give you the cholesterol and glucose level in your blood. Professional technicians will perform the tests and give you the results within 10 minutes along with a recommendation for follow-up steps to ensure your continued good health. The test is free of charge and open to all residents. Call the Social Service League for additional information.

'Wolf pit' purchase possible

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Voters may be asked later this spring to authorize the town to buy a parcel of land off Beechwood Street, known locally at the "Wolf Pits," in an effort to protect the town's drinking supply.

Cohasset developer Wayne Sawchuk purchased the multi-acre parcel a number of years ago from the Pratt/Bates Family Trust, and has been eyeing it for a 27-unit senior housing complex. However, the property is adjacent to the Aaron River Reservoir and some worry installation of a large septic system in the area would threaten the town's water supply.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb is concerned over an increase in nitrates and other contaminants in the reservoir. Norfolk Environmental, the water commission's environmental engineers, has been analyzing the impact a development would have on the reservoir. "We're getting a better idea of what the potential risk may be," he said. McNabb added that the commission is being "prudent" by putting the article on the warrant without a definitive risk identified, such as high nitrate counts. An article is an item of business on the agenda at a Town Meeting.

McNabb did not know how much it would cost the town to buy the property.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris backed the commission's article, saying the town needs to "get in on the ground level before development starts." She said the town got in the game too late when it came to the Scituate Arrowwood development.

Scituate has approved a multi-home subdivision that falls within the Aaron River watershed area. However, Cohasset officials didn't find out about the project until the developer had obtained the permits. The water commission, along with the help of the state Department of Environmental Protection, looked into buying the land from the developer, but wasn't able to.

"[McNabb] has done a great job of protecting Cohasset's water supply," McMorris said, "And here is a development right within our water resource district."

But Sawchuk, who developed the Wheelwright Estate subdivision, said if he does submit plans for the complex, it will have a "state-of-the-art" septic system, and shouldn't threaten the water supply.

"Certainly all the environmental concerns would be met within the permit process," he said.

Sawchuk said senior housing is badly needed in Cohasset, and this property is one of the last developable spaces in town that could hold a complex this size. Plus, its proximity to the reservoir and Wompatuck State Park, makes it an ideal spot for a senior complex.

One concern McMorris had was that Sawchuk would apply for a comprehensive permit to circumvent some of the town's zoning bylaws. However Sawchuk said while he would seek a comprehensive permit, it wouldn't be to skirt bylaws.

"I don't like the term comprehensive permit, because it implies that I want to do something I'm not allowed to do," he said. "That's not the intent. The problem is the only way we can do any elderly housing proposal in the town of Cohasset on any piece of property is through a comprehensive permit. The property is zoned only for single-family homes.

"It's not to get around the process," he continued, "it's the only permitting process I can do."

The comprehensive permit process allows developers, willing to include 25 percent of the proposed units as affordable housing, to develop their land more densely than is allowed under regular review procedures. Though zoned for single-family homes only, that zoning restriction would be waived with a comprehensive permit.

Sawchuk somewhat expected the article, saying, "I've been listening to some people and wondering whether it was coming." He added it seems like a logical step for the town after its fight with Scituate over the Arrowwood development.

However, he pointed out that his development would face stricter setbacks, due to additional watershed regulations passed by the town and state since Arrowwood received permitting.

"We're very careful. Anything we do has every safeguard put in so there aren't any future problems down the line," said Sawchuk, a Beechwood Road resident, and consumer of the town's water supply. "I'm confident anything that is done will not impact the reservoir or the river."

The name "wolf pits" came from a time when the wild animals roamed Cohasset, and were a major public safety threat. In several locations around town, pits were dug and covered over. A carcass would be either strung up over the pit or in the pit, causing the wolf to fall into it.

Herald completes purchase of CNC

CNC president Kirk Davis and Herald president Patrick Purcell announcing that the deal to purchase CNC is official.

Herald Media Inc., owner of The Boston Herald, has completed its acquisition of the assets of Community Newspaper Company (CNC). The Herald has assumed ownership of CNC's 87 weeklies — including this newspaper — four dailies, 14 shoppers, numerous specialty publications, and its Townonline Web site. Terms of the sale were not disclosed.

"This is the beginning of a great media combination," said Herald President Patrick J. Purcell. "With the conclusion of this deal, Herald Media will have combined daily and weekly publications in 140 eastern Massachusetts communities with a total readership of over 2,000,000. The collective resources of the Boston Herald and CNC will provide readers with the best local news while at the same time, providing local advertisers with the most cost-efficient advertising medium available in eastern Massachusetts."

The company announced that Kirk Davis will continue to serve as CNC president and publisher under Herald Media ownership. "Under Kirk's direction, CNC has grown into a robust and profitable multimedia news organization," Purcell said. "He brings a wealth of experience and dedication to the job and I am delighted to have him on our team."

"I am extremely proud of our employees' accomplishments and enthusiastic about CNC's future," Davis said. "We have worked very hard to build a strong media company and I look forward to working with Pat and his team to realize the potential of our combined organizations."

Herald Media also announced the appointment of Kevin Convey to editor-in-chief of CNC. He has been managing editor for the Herald's Sunday and Features sections. He succeeds Mary Jo Meisner, who is leaving the firm following the completion of the sale.

Purcell said, "Kevin is an exceptionally gifted editor. His concepts and ideas about community journalism will build on the solid reputation and importance of each CNC publication."

"I'm grateful to Pat for the opportunity and the challenge," Convey said. "This is an extraordinary group of publications that is committed to serving readers' needs. I look forward to working with this talented and hardworking staff to build on CNC's commitment to local journalism."

"Mary Jo has done an outstanding job as editor and vice-chair of CNC over the past four years," Purcell said. "When she joined CNC, she was charged with improving the editorial quality of its publications and integrating the company's news operations. Since that time CNC has won numerous awards for journalistic excellence including the Suburban Newspaper of the Year Award and, for two years running, the Newspaper of the Year Award for the MetroWest Daily News. She has accomplished what she came here to do and I wish her well."

The Herald also said it made employment offers to nearly all of the 1,100 workers at CNC. As part of the acquisition, The Herald did not offer 36 workers positions in the new organization.

"We have taken care to minimize the number of affected employees," Purcell said.

Community Newspaper Company publishes 87 weekly newspapers; four dailies comprising The MetroWest Daily News, Neponset Valley Daily News, The Daily News Tribune and The Milford Daily News; 14 shoppers; the award-winning online enterprise, Town Online; and a number of targeted specialty publications. The company's publications have a combined circulation of nearly 900,000 distributed to more than 140 communities throughout eastern Massachusetts.

The Boston Herald was purchased in 1994 by Pat Purcell, president of Herald Media, Inc., which also is the parent company for jobfind.com, bostonherald.com, homefind.com and carfind.com. The Herald is the second largest daily newspaper in New England with a circulation of 266,000 and a Sunday circulation of 170,000.

Many fine citizens nominated for annual award

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

From the time nominations opened the first week in December until they closed Jan. 12, the Cohasset Mariner received 15 nominations for its annual Citizen of the Year Award submitted by 40 individuals and families. This is the eighth consecutive year the Cohasset Mariner has sponsored the annual recognition of a local citizen.

A committee of four consisting of editor Mary Ford, Molly Hochkeppel of 123 Atlantic Ave., Osborne Ingram of 274 Beechwood St. and Henry Rattenbury of Briarwood Lane selected Mary Jeanette Murray of 28 Margin St. as Citizen of the Year. Murray joins prior year citizens, the late Gerard Keating, Joseph D. Buckley, Dr. Robert Sceery, the Rev. Gary Ritts, Anna Abbruzzese, Katherine Stanton and the late Clark Chatterton.

The other nominees were:

•The late Virginia Anderson for her countless hours of volunteer work at South Shore Hospital, the Girl Scouts, Senior Center and for always being there to lend a helping hand to everyone;

•Mary Brennock as "Mrs. Santa Claus" greeted old and young on the coldest of days and enhanced the joy of Christmastime in Cohasset for so many;

•Margy Charles for setting a wonderful example of a good, solid person and citizen, as a member of St. Anthony's Parish Council and supporter of local politics;

•John Coe, a quiet and humble man, whom everyone seems to know and like, and for his volunteer efforts at the community center for seniors and at South Shore Hospital;

•Susan Etkind for continuing to oversee the Cohasset Diversity Committee as founder and active member and for bringing the "No Place for Hate" program to Cohasset;

• Judy Fitzsimmons, public health nurse, for going out of her way to help the elderly housebound by bringing cheer to their hearts and seeing that they have the needed medication and follow-up;

•Arthur Lehr for his volunteering with the Boy Scouts, Appalachia Service Project, as Civil Defense Director for the town, helping to maintain Wheelwright Farm and his immeasurable contributions to Cohasset's recycling efforts;

•John McNabb for being doggedly persistent as a citizen volunteer to help protect the water supply from potential contamination and for his work obtaining the necessary permits for the second water storage tank;

• Glenn Pratt for putting so much time and effort into solving the town's cemetery space crunch, for his efforts memorializing local veterans, and for innumerable other efforts behind the scenes through which he donated his time and money to improve the quality of life and spirit of community in Cohasset;

•Wallace St. John for providing the leadership behind the Cohasset Soccer Club that has developed and improved under his supervision, for serving as recreation commissioner, and for being focused on getting things done whether at his church St. Stephen's or by lending hundreds of boxes to help move the contents of the old Osgood School to the new building;

•Nancy Snowdale for serving as the town assistant treasurer for many years, as a long-time member of the historical society, member of the DAR, Lightkeepers Association, Beechwood Cemetery Association and much more;

•Bob Thompson for his countless hours of volunteer work at the food pantry and for his many years as a marvelous science teacher;

•Bob Thompson and Marjorie Steele, co-directors of the food pantry, for working tirelessly to make sure the pantry shelves are stocked and by bringing an intergenerational sense of cooperation to the job;

• Jack Worley, who as recreation director, has created a hometown environment for children and adults by organizing athletic and social programs and for taking on the chairmanship of the Youth Resources Committee that oversaw the establishment of the new teen center at "The Garage."

'Sharing a lifetime of blessings'

Cohasset residents Osborne Ingram, Molly Hochkeppel and Henry Rattenbury, and editor Mary Ford selected Murray from a field of 15 nominees submitted by 40 different individuals and families.

An irrepressible tomboy whose father taught her how to box, the Cohasset-born Murray possesses a congenial personality that has won elections time and time again. She backs up the charm and an ability to remember faces, names and family details, such as what sports your children play or where they are going to school, with a genuine caring. Murray, who decided not to run for reelection in the fall, stepped down last month after 24 years as state representative for the Third Plymouth District consisting of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

"I'm a people person," Murray said. "I was brought up to know that I could do whatever I wanted in life.

"I think God put me on earth to help people."

As an only child, Murray was literally the apple of her father's eye. Murray's father, Nathaniel Hurwitz, whose parents emigrated from Russia, played semi-pro basketball on a team that competed locally and played games at Cohasset Town Hall. He met Lillian O'Reilly at a post-game party and offered to walk her home. The couple fell in love and later married.

Coincidentally years later as a young woman, Murray met her husband Philip at his father's bowling alley in Hull.

Murray spent the first 12 years of her life on Pleasant Street and then moved to Margin Street. Today she still lives on Margin Street in the house next door to the one she grew up in, a home she shares with her daughter and son-in-law, James and Lillian Curley and their two children. Murray's husband passed away in 1989.

In the modest home, family photographs featuring her parents, husband, three children and five grandchildren surround her. In her upstairs apartment, she has yet to tackle nearly 40 large corrugated cardboard boxes full of papers from her years at the Statehouse. Even Murray's "disorganization" when it comes to paperwork has endeared her to many.

"I give this unqualified recommendation mindful of the fact that Mary Jeanette may not be the most organized person," wrote local attorney Charles J. Humphreys in his nomination of Murray. "Like the year she was cookie chairman of the Cohasset Girl Scouts in which she exhorted all the Girl Scouts and Brownies to break all previous records in the sale of cookies, only to find when the truckload of cookies arrived, Mary Jeanette had 'misplaced' the list of all the persons who purchased cookies.

"My recollection is that this problem was patiently solved by her late devoted husband, Phil. Not withstanding her organizational skills, we always know that her heart is in the right place."

Getting into local politics came naturally to Murray. Encouraged by her husband, she ran for selectman in 1968 and lost by 89 votes. The next year, she tried again and beat Helen Scripture. Ironically Murray, a tough veteran of innumerable elections, still feels a sense of guilt about beating an incumbent.

"I didn't think she was running," Murray recalled. "But once I had taken papers out, it was too late to turn back."

That "iron will" surfaced years before when Murray enlisted in the US Marines in 1945 and served for 18 months. Her father, who also served as state representative and state commissioner of veterans services, fought in World War I and was active in the American Legion where he served as commander four times.

"As the American Legion motto says, I was brought up on God and country," she says.

Murray, who also inherited her father's athletic ability drew on his example of public service that provided the cornerstone of her career.

Although her legacy of service extends to organizations and causes such as her work establishing residential homes for retarded citizens and fight to keep casino gambling out of her district, Murray will likely be most remembered for her connection to people.

She has never tired of attending thousands of functions where she enthusiastically interacted with constituents.

"Mary Jeanette was always accessible, either personally or by telephone, to listen and to act responsibly relative to the concerns of her constituents," says Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road. "She never faltered on her strong commitment to maintain the best quality of life from the unborn to the elderly."

Growing up in a town that has more than its share of millionaires, Murray — who came from a modest background — always possessed the ability to cross any perceived or real "class" barrier with ease.

When Murray was a girl, Cohasset had a population of 1,200. She knew everyone — rich or poor — and had 28 first cousins from her mother's family alone. ("I counted," she recalls with a laugh.)

"My grandmother cleaned almost all the summer homes in Cohasset," Murray says. "My grandfather ran a steamroller."

Murray went to the Ripley Road School (before it was renamed the Joseph Osgood School) and the old Cohasset High School on Elm Street (since razed). She attended Boston University and later worked at Rockland Trust as a bank teller.

No longer making the trip to Beacon Hill every day, Murray now ponders the future while she reflects on the past. She hasn't ruled out a run for selectman either this year or next. And she hopes to write her memoirs one day. And as she has for nearly 13 years, Murray continues to have lunch every Saturday with four long-time women friends. She also bowls in a league.

But whatever Murray decides to do — there's little doubt, she will give it her all.

"I've been called tough," Murray says. "I never thought I was, but I guess I am.

"The Jewish side of me usually holds the Irish side down — but when the Jew goes along with the Irish you'd better watch out!"

Murray joins prior year Citizens of the Year, the late Gerard Keating, Joseph D. Buckley, Dr. Robert Sceery, the Rev. Gary Ritts, Anna Abbruzzese, Katherine Stanton and the late Clark Chatterton.

Union says board won't back cops said.

Noonan said police do use discretion but if alcohol is found inside a car, for example, with teenagers, everyone under 21 will be arrested. If there were a couple of beers in the trunk, that might be another matter, he said.

He said he goes over every arrest made by his officers.

"I have no problem with any arrests my officers have made," Noonan said.

Reacting to the budget issue, Chief Noonan said police in the department are all wearing multiple hats including safety officer, PALS officer, rape investigator, hate crimes officer, prosecutor, firearms instructor, and so on.

The department has spent $126,000 on overtime so far this fiscal year (which began July 1). Last year's overtime budget reached $221,000. Police are not allowed to refuse overtime.

"I have officers working five to six overtime shifts a week," Noonan said. Even one additional officer would help fill shifts and give officers some time off, he said. Average age in the department is 42 and the average length of service is 15 years.

"We're operating right on the edge constantly," he said. "The bottom line is I could use three to four officers in a heartbeat to make this department run the way it should."

Quigley, the union president, said Wednesday the union will charge selectmen with "unfair labor practices" if they fail to bargain with the union over the status of the detectives or return to the status quo. He said under the police contract selectmen can move officers around for the "protection of the town" but not in an effort to keep the overtime budget down which the union alleges is the case.

"We have had no problem at all filling the overtime shifts," Quigley said. "The only reason they are doing this (returning detectives to uniform) is to avoid paying overtime."

The issue of additional officers was on the forefront of Tuesday's selectmen's meeting. Town Manager Mark Haddad announced the police department had been awarded a $75,000 federal COPS grant for the town to hire an additional officer. The grant would cover 75 percent of the new officer's salary the first year, 50 percent the second, and 25 percent the third and final year of the grant.

Noonan, in attendance at the meeting, once again made a plea for the town to use the grant for additional staffing.

But Sullivan questioned the need for the additional person on the town payroll. "I just haven't seen evidence as to why we need another officer," he said.

Sullivan said he understood it takes nine officers of the 17-member force to work every day, but he said that left eight officers who aren't working, especially now that the department has civilian dispatchers.

Selectman Merle Brown added that when Noonan originaliy proposed switching to civilian dispatchers in an attempt to free up a sergeant, it was pitched to the town that it would eliminate the need for additional officers. Civilian dispatchers handle emergency calls for the police and fire departments.

However Callahan and Selectman Ronnie McMorris preferred to defer to Noonan.

"It's up to the police chief to tell the board what he thinks we need to maintain public safety," McMorris said. "I think we need to give what he's saying some weight."

Callahan said while he doesn't think the department needs to expand to 22 or 24 officers, he does agree with Noonan's opinion that Cohasset needs a 20-man police force. "Town Meeting supported the COPS grant application last year, and we can always revisit the issue in three years " when the grant runs out, he said.

The town would be on the hook for $14,000 the first year to pay for the new officer, if they accepted the grant money.

Selectmen voted to discuss collective bargaining and deployment of security personnel issues in executive session at the end of Tuesday night's meeting. The Cohasset Mariner made a formal objection to the vote, saying the issues the board said it was going to discuss aren't covered under the "deployment of security personnel" exemption the town has in the Open Meeting Law. The Mariner will file a complaint with the Norfolk County District Attorney's office.

School committee to vote on $10.2 million budget ing for music and art instruction. The Osgood will see its technology aide position reinstated at a cost of $25,000. The Deer Hill is slated to receive $3,500 for additional MCAS tutorial help, and $4,500 for a math tutor.

The middle/high school will get $15,000 for additional custodial help, $16,768 to reinstate the no-cut policy at the middle school, and $6,351 to bring back the varsity softball program.

The budget also has included $42,000 for a full-time business manager, $7,000 to purchase updated software, and $3,500 to pay for an audit of the department.

Superintendent of schools Dr. Edward Malvey said he had to increase professional development funds by $24,000 in order to meet contractual and state spending requirements.

Superintendent of schools Dr. Edward Malvey said he had to increase professional development funds by $24,000 in order to meet contractual and state spending requirements. As the Mariner reported last month, the state Department of Education cited the school department for not setting aside enough money for professional development for teachers. Malvey said the $24,000 will demonstrate a "good-faith effort" to right that situation.

Malvey also included $6,000 to change the middle/high school's fuel supply from a number four heating oil to a number two. He said number two oil is a thinner oil, and is needed to allow the school's boilers to live for another two years until the new ones are installed as part of the upcoming school renovation project.

The one line item not included in this budget is the $100,000 increase in special education funding requested by Student Services Director Stephen Kaplan. As they did last year, the school committee has elected to underfund the budget by $100,000 and seek the additional funds in a special fall town meeting, when the school department has the final state aid numbers and knows how many students are receiving special education services..

Committee member Chartis Tebbetts is against separating out the money but said she will "reluctantly" support it. Noble reminded people that special education, as required by law, will be paid for whether the $100,000 in additional funding is approved in the fall or not. She added that if the fall funding plan does fail, $100,000 will be cut from somewhere else.

School board slams Mariner headline

Deer Hill principal defends fourth-grade performance on MCAS

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset School Committee lashed out at the Cohasset Mariner last week, criticizing a headline about Deer Hill students' performance on the controversial 2000 state Massachusetts Comprehensive Academic Standards exam.

On Jan. 25, the Mariner ran a headline saying "Fourth graders get 'F' on MCAS," on top of a story about how the students failed to meet the improvement guidelines established by the state Department of Education. The headline drew heavy criticism from Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan, and others, who criticized it for "sensationalizing" the issue and "insulting" the students.

The school committee commented on the headline at Thursday's board meeting, that featured Callahan defending the school's performance.

"Those children did not deserve the National Inquirer headline that was in the Mariner last week," scolded committee member Stephanie Noble.

"As a father of a fifth-grader [who was a fourth-grader last year], and who knows a lot of them, I can not tell you how angry I was when I saw that," added committee member Mark DeGiacomo. "I know everyone makes mistakes, but this was a bad mistake."

Each spring for the past three years, students in the fourth, eighth and tenth grades around the state take the MCAS, as required under the 1993 state Education Reform Act. Schools were rated this past year based on a performance and improvement ratings arrived at by averaging the test scores from 1999 and 2000 and comparing them to a 1998 baseline test score. Based on the 1998 MCAS test scores, schools were placed in one of six baseline categories for performance: very high, high, moderate, low, very low or critically low. Each category had a point range for expected improvement. Using the average of the 1999 and 2000 scores, each school was rated as to whether it met its individual goal.

Though the Deer Hill school ranks 63rd out of 294 schools that took the test, its students' scores did not improve significantly enough for the state, and was told it had "failed" to meet its expectations.

Callahan again voiced his objection to the characterization to the school committee.

"We went from 29 percent [in 1998] to 34 percent [in 2000] scoring in the advanced category," he said. "That's 5 percent moving into the higher categories. We had a 7 percent failure rate in math in 1998, and 2 percent in 2000."

Callahan said the school did not fail the MCAS, it failed to meet the states improvement levels, despite, "more students getting higher scores, and less students failing."

He told the board only 12 percent of schools "exceeded" the state's expectations, and said "most of those schools did poorly in 1998." He added, "There are schools in the area who scored less than us, but met their expectations."

He conceded the school does need to work on its language skills. "Our weakest area is writing, but we are working on that," he said.

In an attempt to show the school committee how unfair he thought some of the fourth grade test was, he read a list of vocabulary words the fourth graders — nine-year olds — were expected to know. The list included artifacts, embalming, medicinal, ailments, muffling, and sarcophagi.

"Do you know what that means?" he asked the board, referring to the word sarcophagi. "Even I had to look it up."

Committee member Chartis Tebbetts said the results are available at the Deer Hill School for anyone with questions about the test and the results.

Mariner editor Mary Ford called the headline an "error in judgement," and has discussed the matter with Callahan.

"We did not mean to insult or hurt the feelings of any fourth or fifth grader," she said. "If it did, we apologize."

Garden secrets at community center

Dreaming of your summer garden? This winter, come and learn the secrets of successful perennial gardening. the South Shore Community Center is offering gardening classes to break the winter doldrums, and give all gardening enthusiasts a head start on spring planting. Succession of bloom, plant combinations, the placement of annuals, small trees and shrubs, design principles ease of maintenance, and local sources are just a sampling of what is covered in Ginny Ballou's popular six-week perennial gardening course which will start Thursday, March 1, for six weeks from 7 to 9 p.m. In this class you will earn hands-on planting as well as a slide/lecture and demonstration.

Ballou, who owns and operates Mrs. Blossom's Flower Company — a seasonal fresh cut flower operation — also designs perennial gardens, offers horticultural consultations and runs seasonal workshops in her Hersey Street gardens. Member of a number of professional horticultural organizations, Ballou has been teaching this course since 1992 Her lovely perennial gardens have been on a local tour. She also founded The Perennial Gardeners, a thriving local garden club.

Nicholas John Ryan makes an entrance

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HEALTHY FEBRUARY

Hello Everyone, I hope that everyone is finally healthy and well. January was definitely filled with "bugs" but here's hoping that February only brings hearts, good health and SNOW!

SPECIAL NEWCOMER

We have a special newcomer to our town to talk about. Nicholas John Ryan, was born on Jan. 1, 2001 at 3:21 am. His birth date is 01/01/01! Nicholas is the adorable son of John and Kristin Ryan and he weighed in at 7 lbs., 20 oz. and was 20-ins. long. Nicholas' grandparents are Carolyn and Delbert Fletcher of Fort Jones, Calif. and Arthur and Annie Oberg of San Jose, Calif. What a wonderful way to start off the new year. Congratulations to all and welcome to Cohasset, Nicholas.

NEW ARRIVAL

Another new addition to our world was the birth of Daisy Marie Koch, daughter of former Cohasset resident, Julie (Lanata) Koch and her husband, Brian. Daisy made her entrance on Jan. 15 at 11:12 p.m., and weighed 6 lbs., 9 oz. and was 19.5 inches long. Congratulations to Julie and Brian who are residing in Fort Lauderdale. I bet she is a real, little cutie!

BIRTHDAY WISH

I would like to send out a special, Happy Birthday wish to Charlotte Fratus from her great niece, Kelly Dickson and her great, great niece and nephews, Mackenzie, Andrew and Devon. Charlotte is turning 92 on Feb. 10. Happy Birthday to a wonderful lady.

HOCKEY FANS

Calling all hockey fans! During the month of February, the Cohasset Varsity Hockey Team will sell raffle tickets to the March 24, 1 p.m. Bruins game against the Colorado Avalanche. This is a totally sold-out game and these are very sought after tickets! The winner will receive a pair of premium seating club section tickets to the March 24 game, valued at $150. Raffle tickets cost $5 each and the winner will be drawn on Sunday, March 4. Proceeds will be used to benefit the Cohasset High School Varsity Hockey Team Program. So all of you hockey fans, support our Varsity Hockey Team and buy a raffle ticket from our Varsity Players or, call any of the Hockey Boosters to purchase a ticket: Jo-Ann Pilczak 383-0268, Trish Morse, 383-1622, Chris Straughn, 383-9857 Shelanne Durkin, 383-9225 or Ann Rasmussen at 383-1907. You may be the lucky person sitting in the premium seating section watching this sold out game. The Hockey Boosters sincerely thank Mike O'Connell for donating these tickets and making this fundraising event possible.

SPECIAL MOMENT

Boston Pops conductor Keith Lockhart and Rosemary Raccio of Cohasset recently shared a special moment. Meeting him was a real highlight, Rosemary says.

ART AWARD

Barbara and Warner Henderson of Cohasset are crowing their praise of their daughter, Kelsey.(with good reason!) Kelsey is a senior at the Cambridge School of Weston and has been awarded a scholarship from the Boston Globe Scholastic Arts Awards for her portfolio submission. She is one of four regional winners in the state of Massachusetts! What a great honor, Kelsey!

Keep up all your hard work.

WOMEN IN SPORTS

On Feb. 2, Kristen Sheerin and Maggie O'Neil were in attendance representing Cohasset High School at the National Girls and Women in Sports Day. This event was held at Faneuil Hall and was sponsored by the MIAA and New Agenda NorthEast. Featured speakers were Kristine Lilly of the women's Olympic team and the Boston Breakers, Sharon Barbano, a World Class Marathoner and Mary Pratt of the women's baseball tam, The Georgia Peaches. Kristin and Maggie are both students at CHS. This was great to hear girls!

EQUESTRIENNE

Some more news about an exceptional young person here in our town. Jenny Roche, who is a 12-year-old seventh grader at the Middle School has been riding horses since she was 5. Jenny had her first show season last summer on her horse, "Pocos Diamond Jessie." Imagine the surprise of her very proud parents, Sarah and Adrian Roche, when they found out that Jenny had earned enough points to be Reserve Champion for the Western Pleasure Class in the Massachusetts Horsemans Council year-end awards and was third in New England for the N.E. Horsemans Council awards. Both of these awards were in the under-19 section. Jenny attended two banquets, one in Milford, Mass. and on in Connecticut and she was with her trainer, Nancy Moos who was with her when she collected her awards. What a great accomplishment for such a young lady. Jenny goes to the Mount Hope Farm in Scituate every day where she mucks out the stalls and cares for the horses, rain or shine! Congratulations!

FOLK MUSIC

A wonderful night is slated for March 10 at the Second Congregational Church on the Town Common. Coffee House Night with Folk Music by the group, PBJ is being held on March 10 from 8-10 p.m., with doors opening at 7:30. The group is an outstanding singing trio, currently appearing all through the Boston area. The ticket price is $8, which includes beverages and desserts, not to mention this wonderful evening of entertainment. Tickets can be purchased by calling 383-0345 at the church. Don't miss out as this sounds like a great event.

RAFFLE, SOIREE

It is not too late to buy your raffle tickets for the wonderful Chinese Basket Raffle being held in conjunction with the PSO sponsored St. Valentines Soiree, this Saturday at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham. The tickets are $1 each and you can order as many as you would like. The many baskets are wonderful and we have such themes as: Cohasset Kitchens, Cheese Lovers, Decorators Delight and many, many more. If you would like to purchase last minute tickets, please send in your $ with name and phone number to Jen Piepenbrink, 622 CJC Highway or email me at jenpiep@yahoo.com. This is a great way to show your support for the schools and maybe your name will be one of the ones called the night of the dance!

SILENT AUCTION

South Shore Art Center Gallery artists JoAnne Chittick, Susan DeMichelle and Ros Farbush, all of Cohasset donated paintings to the "Share Your Heart With Rosie's Place" silent auction. All proceeds from the auction help to support Rosie's Place, a women's shelter dedicated to providing a safe and nurturing environment while helping homeless women maintain their dignity, seek opportunity and find security in their lives.

Have a great week! Don't forget to send all information to me at: Jen Piepenbrink 622 CJC Highway jenpiep@yahoo.com or ATSchoolsIn@aol.com 923-1057.

Residents, officials praise abutters meeting with MBTA

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It was the best opportunity abutters of the Greenbush right-of-way might have to get specific mitigation details about their property.

On Tuesday, more than a dozen tables in Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium were covered with blown-up, detailed maps of every house, building, and street within 100 feet of where the proposed commuter rail line would come rumbling down the tracks. Behind them were MBTA-hired engineers to discuss the called-for noise and vibration mitigation measures with property owners standing on the other side of the table.

The hastily arranged meeting was the result of the previous week's public hearing to discuss the proposed mitigation agreement between Cohasset and the MBTA. The majority of those that crammed into the selectmen's office were abutters filled with questions and doubts about what exactly was in the deal for them, and whether the MBTA would be held to its promises.

The day after the hearing, MBTA senior project coordinator Kevin Dasey, followed through his promise of the night before, and set up the meeting as a time individual abutters could come in, ask questions, and get informed.

Though no one will say all residents walked away happy, or that minds were changed from anti- to pro-Greenbush, most said the meeting was a good idea and helpful.

"It's been very informative, I'm glad they had it," said Ripley Road resident Denis Rossi, who said the train will come "almost through my house." At the meeting, Rossi was able to discuss moving a proposed fence, that was going to be a foot and a half from the rear of his house, back several feet.

He bought the house in 1993 knowing full well the train was on the discussion table, and though he would "rather not see it come," he is more concerned with making sure the MBTA is held to its word.

"What they promise and what they deliver can be two separate things," Rossi said about the MBTA. As of now, Rossi's house is scheduled to receive new triple-glazed windows to block out noise, air conditioning to make up for the inability to open windows, possible sound insulation for the house, and vibration mats under the tracks behind his house.

Though he said he was pleased with what he heard from the MBTA, his end opinion will depend on "whether the MBTA follows through or not."

Carousel Antiques co-owner Amanda Burgoon was even less optimistic than her Ripley Road neighbor. Her store's walls still bear the cracks from the rumbling-by of heavy machinery from the James Brook flood control project from two years ago, and last year's Central Cohasset sewer installation project.

"I'd like to be more reassured that my building isn't going to shake," she said. Even though the MBTA has promised vibration mats, she reminded them that her shop, and the area surrounding it, sits on peat moss, which could lessen the impact the mats have. Burgoon, who has been at the site for 25 years, said the MBTA is willing to give her $5,000 for new windows, but doubts how effective that will be. "I'm not a contractor, but I don't think $5,000 will go a long way," she said,

She also lamented the loss of parking spaces from beside her shop, and also that her children, who live with her on the second-floor of the building will be losing their backyard.

"I'm very apprehensive about what they tell me," she said.

But she said she thought the meeting was helpful. "The idea is good, people have a lot of questions," Burgoon said.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan was at the lion's share of the meeting and said he was pleased with both the turnout and the presentation. "It's been very helpful. People have very specific questions about their own property," he said.

Callahan called the turnout "steady" and said while all the MBTA engineers on hand have been engaged with residents, they weren't "overwhelmed."

He said though some people may feel they didn't get all the answers they were looking for, the meeting had remained civil. The town made comment forms available for residents to further expound their thoughts and concerns about the ongoing mitigation negotiation process.

Dasey said the MBTA was happy to put the meeting together. "These types of meetings does nothing but good," he said. "We have never run a meeting like this that hasn't turned out positively."

The one caveat Dasey had was that the MBTA couldn't guarantee what was on the maps Tuesday, would be exactly the same in two years.

"These are just conceptual plans that show the layout, the streets, houses and the proposed mitigation," he said, calling the project's design-phase "less than" 30 percent complete. "The plans will reflect things we agree on. When we get up to 30 or 60 percent completed, then the plans get more detailed."

Selectmen met last night with MBTA officials to discuss some of the 21 items of concern that Callahan collected from last week's public hearing. Though no official timetable has been established to reach an agreement, Dasey has urged the town "to try and get it done as expeditiously as possible."

Throwing more gasoline onto the fire to get things done, Jerusalem Road resident Dr. Edward Woods presented the board with a petition signed by 49 Cohasset residents that "urge the town to sign the agreement."

Woods said it took him just over an hour to collect the signatures one day at the Recycling Transfer Facility, and that two-thirds of the signers "leapt" at the opportunity to sign the petition.

"Citizens are anxious to get through with it and for the town to move on to something else," he said.

Deadline looming for town election candidates

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

With a week to go before all nomination papers must be turned in to the Board of Registrars, only one candidate is officially on the ballot, as of yesterday.

Just Selectman Chairman Thomas Callahan has collected the needed signatures to secure a spot on the ballot. Town elections are April 7.

John Muncey was the latest person to take papers out. He is seeking reelection to the Cohasset Housing Authority.

Only two battles loom for town seats. Pleasant Street resident George Haley has taken out papers to run for a seat on the Paul Pratt Library Board of Trustees, along with incumbents Sarah Pease, Barbara Power and June Hubbard. Town voters elect three people to a three-year term.

Also, Osgood PSO member Adrienne MacCarthy is looking to run against incumbent School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo and committee Chairman Pat Martin. Martin and DeGiacomo are the first incumbents to seek reelection to the school committee since at least 1997.

So far running unopposed are current Water Commissioner Rob Kasameyer, Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo, Board of Assessors member Elsa Miller; Callahan, and fellow selectman Merle Brown. Richard Brown of Church Street, is the only person to take out papers for the open Planning Board seat and Stanton Road resident Sean Cunning has taken out papers for sewer commissioner.

Nomination papers for the annual town election are now available at the Town Clerk's Office.

Current planning board member Terry Atherton, sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury, and Recreation Commission member Thomas Wigmore have decided not to seek reelection..

Two water commissioners spots will be up for election, though one will be for a one-year term to replace former commissioner Chip Muncey. Muncey resigned Jan.1, and was temporarily replaced by Glenn Pratt, until someone can be elected to fill the year left of his term. Pratt has taken out papers for the position.

Nomination papers for the annual town election are now available at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions are up for grabs:

Selectmen - two for three years
School Committee - two for three years
Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three for three years
Assessor - one for three years
Board of Health - one for three years
Cohasset Housing Authority - one for five years
Planning Board - one for five years
Recreation Commission - one for five years
Sewer Commission - one for three years
Water Commission - one for three years, one for one year to fill an unexpired term

Nomination papers must be submitted to the Board of Registrars by Feb. 15.

Door still open for freight rail service

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The possibility of freight trains rolling down a restored Greenbush commuter rail line still exists, says MBTA officials and others close to the project, however the practicality of running the trains makes the chance of it ever happening slim.

According to MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan, freight rights from Boston down to Hingham Lumber do still exist, though a train has not run down the tracks since 1983. Brennan said the MBTA is not able to deny those pre-existing rights to whomever still holds them. If they did, the freight company could petition the federal Surface Transportation Board for permission.

Brennan said the MBTA could enforce "reasonable restrictions" such as banning the movement of freight at night, or requiring and change in the rights to go through an environmental impact permitting process, but it can't flat out refuse the pre-existing right. "We can't just say we'll never allow service," he said.

However, the preexisting freight rights only extend to Hingham Lumber, and the MBTA does have the ability to refuse freight train service past the lumberyard. So if freight trains aren't allowed past Hingham Lumber, which is being forced off the property in favor of the Nantasket Junction train depot, the question is, where would the freight train go?

"It's not like the rail is connected to a port or another major city. What can you do in a dead-end corridor, haul trash?" Brennan asked. "It's cheaper to do that by truck."

As a result, he said, "There's little, if any, likelihood of freight service on this line."

But that's not good enough for

"It's not like the rail is connected to a port or another major city. What can you do in a dead-end corridor, haul trash? It's cheaper to do that by truck."

— Andrew Brennan, MBTA director of environmental affairs

Greenbush Citizen's Advisory Committee member, and North Main Street resident, Edward Fegreus. "The MBTA has the discretion to refuse service beyond Hingham Lumber," he said, emphasizing the word 'discretion.'

Fegreus has asked selectmen to secure language in its mitigation deal with the MBTA, that would require town approval for freight service to travel through Cohasset. He said in a letter to selectmen, "For obvious reasons, railroad freight service through Cohasset will create significant impacts without commensurate benefits."

But Brennan argued that if a freight company wanted to use the Greenbush rails past Hingham Lumber the MBTA would require the company to review the need for additional noise and vibration mitigation.

Joe Norton, a Scituate selectman and chairman of the CAC, thinks Greenbush-corridor residents were misled about the chance of freight service. "I think for a long time people were led to believe that no freight service would be allowed," he said," and now we're being told that it is a possibility."

Norton did doubt whether it would ever happen, and added, "It's a bigger issue for some, than to others."

Greenbush would be the third and final leg of the Old Colony commuter rail system. Lines going to Middleboro and Plymouth have already been constructed and are operational. The Greenbush line would go through Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and end in Scituate. The project, which has the support of Governor Paul Cellucci, Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, and House Transportation Committee Chairman Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, is expected to cost up towards $440 million to complete.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Citizen of the Year

As editor of the Cohasset Mariner, it is my pleasure to announce that Mary Jeanette Murray is the Citizen of the Year.

The former den mother, Girl Scout leader, selectman and state representative has touched countless lives. For the past 24 years until last month, the 76-year-old made the trek to Beacon Hill nearly every day where she tirelessly fought for her constituents in the Third Plymouth District.

"She never faltered on her strong commitment to maintain the best quality of life from the unborn to the elderly," wrote Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, in her nomination.

While nominations were open, a total of 40 different individuals or families took the time to propose a citizen for the annual award, detailing his or her contributions to help make this town one we all love.

Regrettably we cannot recognize each of the 15 nominees with the Citizen of the Year Award. And we send our heartfelt thanks to all whose who wrote such thoughtful letters and notes nominating their fellow citizens.

Our thanks go to Osborne Ingram of 274 Beechwood St., Henry Rattenbury of Briarwood Lane and Molly Hochkeppel of 123 Atlantic Ave. for joining me at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square for the challenging task of poring over the nominations.

The selection committee narrowed the field down to nine, then five, three and finally one. The final decision was unanimous.

So we extend our heartfelt congratulations to Mary Jeanette, a mother and grandmother, who still found the time to devote countless hours to so many people and worthwhile causes and issues.

Nancy O'Toole, 13 Haystack Lane, a former administrative aide to Mary Jeanette, said it best in her nomination:

"She is thoughtful, humble, kind, devoted, grateful, prayerful, wise and above all, honest with herself and others," Mrs. O'Toole stated. "Her generosity of time and energy to the Cohasset community is insurmountable."

With this award, the Cohasset Mariner offers recognition for making a difference. In our society too many role models go unrecognized. Too often people today look to the sports, rock or movie starts with envy, when the real hero is the local police officer, firefighter, parent, teacher, church leader or government official.

The annual Citizen of the Year Award is our way of taking our hats off to those among us who go that extra mile without asking for anything in return but the intrinsic reward of helping to make Cohasset a better place.

As Mrs. Plante wrote:

"After all these years of working so hard for so many, covering hundreds of issues, Representative Mary Jeanette Murray is graciously stepping down the sweeping steps of the Statehouse," she stated. "I would like to say a great big 'thank you' by requesting that the Cohasset Mariner nominate her for its annual Citizen of the Year Award."

Thinking of running for local office?

If you have ever thought about running for school committee, health board or other local office, then mark your calendar for Wednesday, Feb. 28.

That's when the Hingham League of Women Voters will run an informative workshop on what's involved in running a campaign — from dealing with the media, to campaign finance laws, understanding the responsibilities of the office, and much more. Future campaign managers might be interested, also.

The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. at Hingham Town Hall, 220 Central St., and is open to residents of Cohasset, Hull, Scituate, and Hingham.

Experienced candidates, campaign managers, and League members will provide pertinent advice on what to expect once you've made the decision to throw in your hat, or are simply testing the waters. Handouts on financial reporting and nominating deadlines, etc., will be available.

For further details, please call Patricia Facey, 781-383-0470.

Freight trains

DEAR MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

As some of you may know, I have been a member of the MBTA's Citizens' Advisory Committee for the Old Colony Railroad Rehabilitation Project since 1992. During my attendance at CAC meetings, I have learned that the MBTA may permit freight service over the Greenbush line. In fact, pre-existing freight rights prevent the MBTA from prohibiting freight service on the Greenbush Line between Boston and Hingham Lumber. However, there are presently no freight rights beyond Hingham. For obvious reasons, railroad freight service through Cohasset will create significant impacts without commensurate benefits.

Accordingly, I urge the members of the Board of Selectmen to obtain an agreement with the MBTA that freight service will not be conducted over the Cohasset section of the Greenbush Line without the prior approval of the Town of Cohasset.

Column on mark

TO THE EDITOR:

I'm not writing just to see my name in print; I always feel a bit uneasy whenever that happens. But I believe in certain causes, like helping the human race, and I have to commend Tom Henshaw for his Feb. 1 "Super promo" column.

My dad was a football coach, so I am familiar with the real thing. Tom hits the bull's eye here, not only with our glorification of money, but also with our loss of personal moral values. These two blights, along with a few other problems, are quickly bringing us to our knees.

Tom's column was right there with "Gulliver's Travels" in showing the way with succulent satire. Bravo!

Time to speak up

TO THE EDITOR:

I was able to endure the dialogue at the Selectman's meeting last Tuesday night, until I heard Freddie Koed state that signing off or not on the MBTA train agreement has nothing to do with its ultimate inception. Fred, I love you, but feel that your opinion and agenda are far too politically driven, and do not show enough reverence for the core environmental and aesthetic quality of this town. The same holds true for Joe Sullivan whose politics moved him to defy his own town's wishes and embrace this train; or Paul, "The Innovator," Cellucci himself. If either one of them was appointed to a more powerful position, the word Greenbush would never again pass their lips.

For the state to spend $450 million, (probably twice that in the end), to remove 2 percent of the cars from the nightmarish South Shore commute is ludicrous. It will in no way change the face of this commute, but will forever change this area. Eighteen hundred parking spaces in Scituate? How short-sighted can we be to favor the last diesel train installation in this country?

To the train advocates in this town who are frustrated that Cohasset doesn't a little better resemble Greenwich, I suggest instead a trip to Abington. Does anyone really think that the Cohasset powerbrokers are going to abandon their BMWs and Lexuses for a seat on the MBTA? Whistles? The federal government is going to mandate whistles. See what happens when things become political?

If the state is serious about reviving the transportation on the South Shore it could spend half the money and create a feeder system to the commuter boat and use the resource that borders a good part of the route. If Marshfield and Duxbury need a train, figure out a more direct sensible line to access the Route 53, Route 139 area. A quick look at a map will tell you what an illogical route to Boston the Greenbush Corridor really is.

I plead that the Selectmen as a board, who by a three-to-two vote oppose this project, unite with the boards of Scituate, Weymouth and Braintree and go to the State House and complain loudly. They claim to have done this but it seems that it needs to be done another time with resolve. If citizens are need for reinforcement, I can be reached at (781) 383-0914.

Hingham got $40 million in mitigation and we are getting $1 million to become Marshfield's parking lot? I can hardly stand our town being dealt such a blow by a star struck, non-innovative governor with his eye on the door. Why are we so afraid to speak up, South Shore? Let's go, as a group, and cry foul now.

COHASSET CARES

Earth course opportunity

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Fellow environmentalist and course colleague Jim Shipsky did a number of us townspeople such a big favor several months ago (do you recall his article, "Taking responsibility for the earth"?) in bringing the nonprofit Northwest Earth Institute's nine-session Deep Ecology course to town. Those of us who have been taking the course think so highly of the program that we want to see it offered again. How about it?

Calm and sensible, carefully-organized and field-tested, the discussion course is most enlightening and stimulating. For some reason the Pacific Northwest denizens are way ahead of us environmentally. Is it all the old-growth forests? I would say offhand that Native American influence is as strong here as there, but then again after visiting the Seattle area and seeing the fantastic graphic tribal reminders and visiting a longhouse presentation/re-enactment (like Plimoth Plantation), perhaps Indian influence really is stronger there.

At any rate, the Deep Ecology course is introduced by one of the volunteer representatives, you pay the $15 for the course manual, and you sign up to facilitate the class you wish. Class members take turns in presenting the eight sessions, Deep Ecology, The Gaia Hypothesis, Spirituality and the Earth, Native American Wisdom, Ecopsychology Simplicity, Bioregionalism, Ritual and Celebration.

I can't say enough about the value of the course. Classes will be held at the First Parish Unitarian Parish House across the street from the common, but there is no connection with any religious denomination. Sign-up sheet is just inside the parish house door or you may call the church office, 383-1100, or me at 383-7053.

See you next time.

Working for the readers

Kevin Convey

I can't tell you what a thrill it is to be working for you. You read that correctly. I said it's a thrill to be working for you, the readers of CNC's publications.

Technically, I am employed by Community Newspaper Company, which last week was acquired by Herald Media Inc., publisher of the Boston Herald, where I had worked as a business and State House reporter, city editor, Sunday editor and managing editor for Sunday and features for most of the last 19 years.

I began my career in community journalism; I believe very strongly in it. And I think that my job as editor in chief of CNC is to work first and foremost for you, the reader. And I'll tell you something more: every one of CNC's 1100 employees feels the same way.

We are all absolutely committed to making your paper essential reading, bulging with the kind of community news and opinion you can't get anywhere else.

How are we going to accomplish this? By dedicating ourselves to making all of our papers relentlessly local and proudly parochial. We want to make your CNC paper the number-one source of local news in your community.

Since Herald Media began the process of acquiring CNC last year, there's been a lot of talk about what the sale would mean for CNC's papers. Would readers suddenly find their pages stuffed with Herald stories and editorials? Would we attempt to export the Herald's feisty personality to CNC's papers? Would CNC's editorial pages take a conservative turn?

The truth is that while there are areas in which sharing content can help make both the Herald and CNC's papers more comprehensive — areas such as arts, lifestyles and sports, to begin with — the idea is not to bloat CNC's papers with foreign content and boilerplate in an effort to fill pages on the cheap.

I think the Herald is a great newspaper — and, if you will permit me a short commercial, I urge you to read it if you don't already — and I believe its hard-won reputation as the premier source of local news in greater Boston dovetails nicely with the mission of CNC's papers and staffs. Nevertheless, I do not intend to try to export its personality or editorial policies to CNC's papers.

Quite the opposite, actually.

The idea from now on — I'll say it again — is to make your paper relentlessly local and proudly parochial. That means you will see less, not more, of the regional and statewide reporting you may have found in your paper in the past. It means you will see less, not more, of the non-local, editorials and columns you may have found in your paper before.

But make no mistake about it: The goal here is not less, but more. I'm asking the staffs of our papers to work harder and smarter to put more local content in your paper.

To accomplish that, I've asked that:

• Staffs write shorter stories and more of them, to make sure you get a broad range of local news;

• Every paper carry community basics such as police and fire logs, town meeting agendas, school lunch menus, obituaries and more to ensure you get the local information you want from your local paper;

• Editors write at least one editorial on a local subject each week, and recruit, from their own staffs if necessary, local op-ed writers and columnists in order to create lively, local editorial pages;

• Each paper dedicate more space to the kind of bread-and-butter local news only community papers can provide, in part by recruiting community-based correspondents who know your town intimately;

• Editors and reporters assume journalistic ownership of their papers. I feel strongly that the staffers putting out your paper know more about you and your community than I do. Therefore I intend to give them the authority to decide what should go into your paper, and how it should be presented, rather than trying to issue orders about stories and editorials. It will be up to them to create papers that not only reflect their communities, but also are a part of them.

We hope that by taking all of these steps we can encourage you to take ownership of your local paper — to read it, get involved with it, argue with it, talk about it and help improve it.

CNC may own and operate these papers, but in reality they belong to their communities and to you.

As for me, I plan to talk with as many of you as I possibly can, ask you how we can make your papers more essential and useful, listen carefully to what you have to say and try to put your suggestions into action.

That's my job. After all, I'm working for you.

Police union upset with selectmen

LETTER

COHASSET POLICE ASSOCIATION
I.B.P.O. LOCAL 641
FEBRUARY 1, 2001
BOARD OF SELECTMEN TOWN OF COHASSET
DEAR MEMBERS OF THE BOARD,

After monitoring the series of events over the course of the past few months as they have unfolded, it appears that it has become necessary to address the Board of Selectmen on behalf of the Cohasset Police Association I.B.P.O. Local 641. We feel that amongst other issues, there has been an obvious lack of support for the Cohasset Police Department by certain members of the Board of Selectmen and as such, we feel that this has negatively effected not only the morale within the department but more importantly, may effect the level of police service that this department has been able to offer its citizens.

It is no secret that throughout the years, some members of the Board have refused, for a variety of reasons, to add manpower to the police department. As such, we have known for years that we would eventually face the potential disastrous situation that now presents itself. As we have anticipated, a set of circumstances presently exists whereby the department is without the services of three police officers and will continue to be for an unknown period of time. Due to the fact that certain members of the Board over the past several years have refused to recognize that this could happen, the department is not prepared for this lack of personnel. As a result of this situation, overtime costs have increased in order for the department to provide the bare minimum police service to the community. Because of these rising costs, it has come to our attention that the department has been ordered to cut the overtime expenditures in any way possible. The only possible way to do this, short of running two police officers on the street at any given time, which incidentally is foolhardy and invites catastrophe, is to place the two police officers acting in the capacity of plainclothes detectives back into a uniformed capacity.

The obvious result of this action is that crimes occurring in this jurisdiction will not be investigated beyond patrol officers simply taking a report at the scene. Ongoing investigations will have to be suspended. Detective's placed back in a patrol capacity, I can assure you, will not and cannot perform the duties of a detective. There won't be any proactive drug investigations taking place, we will not have detectives to process crime scenes, and there will be little chance of clearing cases that require any type of follow-up. We will have the only police department that I know of without a detective division. Even to cut a single detective would be devastating and detrimental to the department.

For years now Chief Noonan's requests for additional officers have been stymied. This police department has been forced to operate on the brink of disaster. What happens if even one more police officer is injured or becomes ill for an extended period of time? This is a legitimate question. Contrary to belief, this is a dangerous profession – even in Cohasset, and employees do get hurt. The department isn't getting any younger and injuries and illness is to be expected and should be properly planned for. The department is understaffed and it's not because the chief has not asked for additional police officers. There is nothing wrong with the way the department is deployed – we just need a little more help – plain and simple.

Members of the Board, we would like you to know that the message you are sending by entertaining this course of action is that you don't care what sort of morale situation exists within the police department. You are also sending the message that some of you, as elected, civilian officials, know more about what a police departments needs than the experienced, dedicated police chief whom you pay to run it. The Hingham Police Department has a captain, five lieutenants and six sergeants. Some members of the Board of Selectmen have stated that even one lieutenant for this department is too many. Unfortunately, we are left with a lieutenant's position that only exists on paper and no mid-level management. Currently the complete command of the department is left to 4 sergeants and the police chief. This is not even close to the strict standards that have been set by the National Commission on Police Accreditation, the agency that sets standards for police departments nationwide.

In its current state, the Cohasset Police Department couldn't fill any of the accreditation requirements. Other departments are able to offer specialized training to their officers to keep them on the cutting edge. Here, due to the consistent under-funding of this department, officers are only sent to the training that is mandated by law. Other training is done at the officer's personal expense and on their own time. Very rarely is the department in a position to offer training that is completely funded by the town.

There has not been an addition to the manning of this department in twenty-five years! In fact, because of the added responsibilities that we now face, many officers spend more time in the station performing administrative tasks and less time on the road than twenty-five years ago yet the town has grown and our calls for service have increased steadily – to almost eight thousand (8,000) in the year 2000 – and we're getting busier all the time. We are forced to work in a sub-standard police station that we outgrew years ago. We ask you, is this fair?

The department has asked that an article be placed on the warrant for the upcoming town meeting so we can replace our firearms, which are almost 10 years old. I have been informed that a certain member of the Board has criticized this article and has said that we do not need new firearms. What an outrage! It should be said that the Cohasset Police Association purchased the current firearms that officers carry with donations that were solicited from residents in the early 1990's. The Association then donated the pistols to the town. The simple fact is that the Town of Cohasset has not purchased firearms for the department since the late 1970's. It's despicable that police officers have to beg and grovel for donations from the citizens to supply us with the most basic police equipment. What an embarrassment.

It has also been no secret to us that certain members of the Board have taken what we believe to be outright anti-law enforcement stance as exhibited by their actions and words. They have reviewed and criticized the work of individual police officers that are simply doing their jobs and in some cases; the motives for such actions have been highly questionable and suspect. This is not fair to the officers or the department. We will continue to closely monitor this situation and address it further in the proper forum if need be.

We have received information that this department has been awarded a federal COPS Universal Hiring Program (UHP) Grant that will pay $75,000 over the course of three years for the town to add another police officer to this department – to bring the total officers to eighteen. We were only one of four police departments in this state to receive one of these grants. Although this won't, by any means, solve the problems we have discussed above, it will go towards alleviating some of them. It is a great opportunity to improve the situation at a reduced cost. If you remember, the Cohasset Police Department was awarded one of these grants in 1994 and we failed to take advantage of it then due to fiscal restraints. We hope that when the Board discusses this grant in the near future, that they will accept it. If we don't take advantage of the grant this time, not only will we be one of the few

Granite heartbreak in Cohasset

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

You'd think biking around Cohasset, especially along Jerusalem Road and Beach Street, would be unalloyed charm and beauty. Mostly it is. I've been biking the same path for about five years now and love it so much I see no reason to sample other routes. But the problem is, the more familiar I get with each piece of woodland, each stretch of dune grass, each outcropping of granite ledge, the more it hurts me when I see pieces of nature destroyed or threatened with destruction.

Lately it's been seeing granite ledge under attack that breaks my heart. Granite ledge millions or billions of years old has been blasted away to build trophy houses on Jerusalem Road. A beautiful range of ledge along Beach Street is threatened with driveways and trophy houses. A landmark outcropping on Margin Street recently disappeared under the concrete foundation of a new house. On King Street a name and number now deface eons-old stone. Painted graffiti can be removed, but carved up, concreted, and blasted granite can never be restored.

We should write a letter of apology to future generations and install bronze castings of it at these former sites of Cohasset's most basic character. "Dear Children, Grandchildren, Great-grandchildren, etc.: We wish you could see the awesome granite ledge which once graced the land here. But we decided to blow it away and build trophy houses. We realized too late it was your birthright. We hope you like the houses, if they still remain."

Two years ago I drew up plans for removing some granite ledge for a sidewalk in front of St. Stephen's Church. At the time it seemed a reasonable safety improvement to me. The portions I designated for removal had already been tampered with in the past in widening Main Street. Today I feel very differently. If there's not enough space for two lanes of cars, diagonal parking, and a sidewalk, then I say let's change the parking, but leave the ledge alone.

As I've followed the path of deep ecology, I've come to share the Native American feeling that no person can truly own the Earth. Especially granite ledge which has endured for ages.

I realize it won't be easy to protect what remains of Cohasset's granite ledge. Most of it is "private property," and our laws and regulations allow "owners" to wreak nearly any destruction upon nature that suits their fancy. As I've followed the path of deep ecology, I've come to share the Native American feeling that no person can truly own the Earth. Especially granite ledge which has endured for ages. Our short life span of 100 years, give or take, is less than the blink of an eye in the life span of Cohasset's stone bones. Surely we do not have the right to destroy in our brief stay on this planet what took billions of years to form.

If you share my feelings about protecting Cohasset's granite character, please contact the Selectmen and urge them to act before the remaining rock ledge is nothing but crushed stone in the leaching fields of a trophy house. If you're the owner one of the properties I've mentioned, please understand my intention is not to offend you, but to try to protect Cohasset's remaining rock ledge. We're all in this together; we all damage the environment with our daily actions; we're all part of the same self.

The name Cohasset, according to Bigelow's Narrative History of Cohasset, comes from the Algonquin "Quonahassit." Quono meaning long, hassi meaning rocky, and the "t" at the end denoting a place. Thus Cohasset means "long rocky place." Cohasset's rocky seacoast and inland exposed rock ledge form the most basic aspect of it's natural character. When we destroy granite ledge we are truly eradicating the essence of Cohasset.

"There are limits to growth. There are no limits to development. The way we live can always be made more beautiful, more inventive, more creative, more efficient, more fulfilling." -Alan AtKisson

Scoreless XFL

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Just when you thought we had hit rock bottom on the football field with a Super Bowl that supposedly featured the New York Giants and. The Baltimore Ravens but actually was best known for its Charles Schwab and Pepsi Cola commercials, what happens?

The XFL, that's what.

I know that the FL stands for "football league" but no one has successfully explained the X. All I know is that if I had anything to do with the XFL's television debut, the Las Vegas Outlaws vs. the New York-New Jersey Hitmen last Saturday, I'd prefer to be known as X, too.

The XFL was promoted as the football league that was going to bring us a dose of violence, sex and entertainment, the like of which was missing from the National Football League's version of violence, sex and entertainment. They didn't quite make it, although they certainly tried.

The first violent injury, which was as eagerly anticipated as the first NASCAR crash at Daytona, came before the opening kickoff of the Orlando Rage and Chicago Enforcers game (not shown on TV, thankfully) when, instead of a coin-toss, two players dove for the ball to see who would kickoff.

Orlando's Hassan Shamsid-Deen not only lost the ball to Chicago's Troy Saunders, but he suffered a left shoulder separation as well. Let's see the NFL top that one for violence.

There wasn't much sex either, although the bosomy Las Vegas cheerleaders looked as though they were willing to give it a try. I've seen as much skin on Nantasket Beach on a hot summer day and all those chicks were trying to do was get a sun tan.

One of the cheerleaders got to tape an interview with Outlaw quarterback Clement in which a lot of knowing looks were exchanged and the conversation seemed to center around the word "scoring."

Which reminded me of an interview given by Joe Namath on one of those late night talk shows, I think it was Johnny Carson's, at a time when the NFL was promoting its own brand of violence, sex and entertainment.

"Are you going to score this Sunday?" asked Johnny.

"No," said Joe. "I gotta play football."

But I digress . . .

If you were a football purist who tuned in to the Outlaws-Hitmen game expecting the real thing on a professional scale, you wound up disappointed, too.

NBC's experimental camera angles, like putting a camera behind the quarterback, made it look like Thayer Academy was playing Buckingham, Brown & Nichols. At least I hope it was a camera angle.

About half time, along with thousands of others, I tuned the XFL out and tuned in that old standby, "The Godfather I," on the USA Channel.

I got in just as Michael was retrieving the pistol from behind the hopper in the men's room in Louis' Restaurant and was about to use it to whack out Solazzo and the police captain.

That was enough violence, sex and entertainment for me.

Democrats caucus in Cohasset

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will hold a caucus at the Town Hall March 3, at 10 a.m. to elect five delegates and five alternates to the 2001 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women.

The convention will be held Saturday, June 2, at the Springfield Civic Center in Springfield. The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Cohasset. Candidates for delegate and alternate must consent to nomination in writing. All candidates may make a two-minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots will be written and secret. Those registered Democrats unable to attend may be considered for delegate and alternate by 2/3 of those present and voting. Those not elected as delegate and alternate may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 129 Portland St., Boston, 02114 no later than 10 days after the caucus date.

For more information, call the Democratic State Committee at (617) 742 6770.

Legislative seminar open to any citizen

The office of State Senator Robert L. Hedlund is now accepting applications for the Citizens Legislative Seminar. The program is designed to familiarize citizens with the legislature and the lawmaking process. Throughout the six-week program, seminar participants will listen to presentations from senators as well as state representatives on the lawmaking process.

"The Citizens Legislative Seminar is another wonderful way for constituents to become more familiarized with the legislative process," said Hedlund. "This is an exceptional program that provides citizens with a "nuts and bolts" style education given first-hand by the very individuals responsible for lawmaking in the Commonwealth."

The Citizens Legislative Seminar will meet from mid-March through mid-April, on Wednesdays from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Specific dates will be announced soon. The seminar is open to any interested citizen. Please contact Hedlund's State House office at (617) 722-1646 as soon as possible for information and applications.

Cardiac surgery

Local newspapers have recently reported that hospitals on the South Shore have applied for Dept. of Public Health permission to perform cardiac surgery. Separately, these same newspapers reported that these same hospitals are frequently not capable of supporting the emergency medical needs of the populations they serve, and are therefore too often on diversion for common medical emergencies. Being on diversion causes delay and potentially serious harm to the patients with the more common medical problems, one child with an ingestion, another with an allergic bee sting reaction, a teenager with a ruptured spleen, a mother with a leaking aneurysm, a father with a motor vehicle head injury, a grandmother with a T.I.A. about to progress to a paralyzing stroke.

Personally, when I get a fever to 106 degrees with dehydration, I do not wish to be driven to Brigham and Women's Hospital, nor do I wish to wait 15 hours in the ER at South Shore Hospital to be seen. But, when I need my cardiac surgery, I will not be upset if I have to be driven a few extra miles to Boston, a trip which I doubt would have any adverse effect on mortality or morbidity. If for medical reasons I might be unable to withstand the extra 50-minute ride, then in all likelihood, I would not be a candidate for cardiac surgery in the first place.

As a provider of medical care on the South Shore, and more importantly as a recipient of care here, it concerns me that, if these permits are granted, the capabilities of South Shore Hospital will be further stressed leading to even more frequent diversions, a situation which would adversely affect the health of so many more patients than could possibly be helped by having their cardiac surgery performed locally.

Our local facilities should continue to do what we do best, but do it completely, before taking on new and very expensive responsibilities which would undoubtedly diminish the quality of the overall medical services we provide to the populations we serve. Once we can demonstrate adequate capability to service all the medical needs of the community, especially emergency needs, especially avoiding diversions, then I see no reason to deny our local hospitals permission to increase the level of service they wish to provide.

Misleading headline

TO THE EDITOR,

We wish to express our sincere thanks to Mary Ann Cushing for her letter regarding the recent misleading Mariner headline about Cohasset's fourth-grade MCAS scores. We appreciate her very thoughtful comments concerning its effect upon both students and educators in our schools.

As she noted, educators must implement instruction around the fluctuating and expanding demands of the MCAS criteria while, at the same time, remaining aware of and responsive to each child's needs and talents.

We would like to acknowledge her letter of support with gratitude.

Resident parking

CHAIRMAN THOMAS CALLAHAN
COHASSET BOARD OF SELECTMAN

CHAIRMAN, THOMAS GRUBER
GREENBUSH MITIGATION COMMITTEE

I am writing as a follow-up to the public meeting that I attended at the Town Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 30, 2001.

My comments here are based on the assumption that the MBTA Greenbush Line will in fact become a reality. As such, I would ask that you seriously consider the following items while the Town has a brief window of opportunity to secure some long lasting concessions on behalf of its residents.

I understand that Cohasset may be subject to an increased assessment fee from the State Legislature on behalf of the MBTA, as a result of the proposed Greenbush Line. At very least, we will pay for Commuter Rail with reduced safety to our children, decreased air quality and the other day in and day out disruptions that will result. My question to you and your colleagues is simply: what benefits will we see in return? The MBTA's response, I imagine, would be the improved commuting experience of the train.

One problem with this, I'm afraid, is that the Town has failed to secure commuter parking for the sole use of it's residents. I first raised this issue to the Mitigation Chairman last year. The response then, and again this week, was simply that the MBTA will own the parking lot and therefore we have no individual right to specific parking for Cohasset's residents. But don't we have something they need?

I realize there have been many issues to deal with, and respectfully, the abutters should be the foremost concern for all. However, it appears that we may be moving ahead without fully realizing the opportunity to correct some significant problems that will ultimately, with time, arise.

I have experienced commuter rail transportation to Boston from the Mansfield area for a number of years recently, and can assure you what has happened there is a good example of what we must avoid. Quite simply, there will be nothing worse than having a train with insufficient resident parking. To bolster this case I have enclosed excerpts from the November 12 , 2000 edition of the Boston Globe and November 15, 2000 Patriot Ledger. These articles speak specifically to the overcrowding and lack of parking that has occurred in Mansfield and along various stops of the recently constructed Plymouth & Middleboro lines. For example, an excerpt of the Globe states, "...the unwritten rule of commuter rail: If you don't get to the station by 7 a.m. forget getting a parking space. There are only 775 of them in the lot - with 300 reserved for Mansfield residents - and an average 1,700 riders a day taking the T from Mansfield to Boston.".

Although we are clearly not in the same situation as Mansfield, please stop a moment and simply consider the local residents of Norwell and Hull (et al.) who will take advantage of the new Cohasset station. Then ask what price they have paid for this convenience.

As the MBTA pointed out on Tuesday, we all have learned from the negotiation mistakes made by the communities along the Plymouth & Middleboro lines. But have we really?

I challenge you and your colleagues to ask yourselves, that after all is said and done, will the residents of Cohasset be assured of parking in the new Cohasset Commuter Rail Station? And why not? Obviously, we can't and shouldn't expect the world, yet I believe we are selling ourselves woefully short on this matter.

I am confident that if given attention, a solution can be found; I will throw out the following for starters: There has been much talk about the dollar amount the Town will be compensated for the railbed right-of-way you are about to transfer to the MBTA. I say again, that although important, the price may never truly reflect the value of this property and therefore we need to focus instead on what lasting benefits we will leave the table with.

I would ask you to consider a transfer of property for the right-of-way the MBTA needs. In return, in addition to what has already being negotiated, the Town should receive a unique parcel within the commuter rail station for "resident only"parking.

I must acknowledge a comment from your colleagues; to paraphrase: who would be responsible for enforcing the parking restriction and maintaining the station area? Here again, it seems a reasonable request that the MBTA take over this responsibility. After all, as things currently stand, they plan to take responsibility for their proposed station. Moreover, the beauty with the transfer of property approach, if done properly, is that there would be no additional costs to the MBTA for such a transaction; something hard to argue against (i.e. they will compensate the current landowner a fixed price for the parking area, regardless of who ultimately would own it).

I should note, even with the highest of optimism, I suspect the Town will ultimately have to police the commuter rail station, even if on a sporadic basis to ensure the safety of commuters entering/exiting Route 3A during rush hour. You have to look no further than the problems in Mansfield; I encourage you to speak directly with them about having to commit police officers to traffic duty. Yet regrettably, as you suggested, the MBTA's traffic studies conclude that a traffic light would simply create more congestion on Route 3A. Yet, why should the Town of Cohasset ultimately be burdened with this nuisance, and for what gain?

I would also ask, that you beware of simply assuming we can increase the parking area in the future (e.g. by adding an upper deck), as that may have a reverse effect and simply attract more out of town traffic. Yet, on the other hand, "resident only" parking might, as much as I hate to say it, go a long way to discourage out of towner's.

I spoke directly with Kevin Dasey of the MBTA on, February 1, 2001 specifically about the possibility of resident only parking as part of the current Mitigation Plan. To summarize, he did not discount this possibility but simply suggested the Town needs to come forth with an interest in this matter. Equally important though, he suggested that should additional parking become necessary, then the Town (as you've apparently discussed) has the power of eminent domain and could take a portion of property South of the proposed station. Are you really prepared to do that?

This is a perfect example of where we have failed to get a legally binding commitment for relief with future parking problems. Please, let's_get something in writing now to assure ourselves of a resident only parking area within the currently proposed lot. After all, if the MBTA's projections fail, who will pay the price?

Finally, more options should be developed to allow access to the station for all. Specifically, a drop off /pick-up point should be added (from North Main Street), as well as safe walking and biking paths (if not on North Main Street, possibly by running a railing guarded path from the intersection of King Street and Route 3A, to the new station.)

You have rightfully scheduled a Train Forum next week to address noise and vibration mitigation issues for the abutters. Similarly though, I would appreciate the opportunity to further discuss the parking situation with you and your colleagues. I offer my assistance to help the Town pursue "resident only" parking and I thank you again, in advance.

Bradley vote

TO THE EDITOR:

As a supporter of Mary Anne McKenna I was always troubled that I liked her opponent Garrett Bradley. After all candidate Bradley was a likeable guy. He not only appeared likeable, but also diligent, dedicated and earnest as a campaigner. His pursuit of the Third Plymouth House seat made him a ubiquitous figure for several months. I am sure I'm not the only voter who met him half a dozen times, often just for a handshake and a welcoming smile.

Why, by the end of the campaign my boat trip to Boston didn't seem complete without Garrett bidding me bon voyage at the Hingham Boat Yard. The skeptic in me questioned, Why the effort? Why the knocking on doors on Forest Ave. on a hot Sunday in August? Why the repeated standouts at the boatyard, supermarket, and roadsides? Why so much money spent for a state rep. seat? For what and for whom? Was this endeavor to serve the people in his district or was this an effort to secure a seat that could become a stepping stone to bigger and better things?

Willing to give him the benefit of the doubt , I am fearful that my skepticism was regrettably indulged two weeks ago as Garrett cast one of his first votes as our representative. This vote repealed an amendment limiting the speakers term to four terms and in so doing has enabled Tom Finneran to serve as Speaker of the House of Representatives for an unlimited reign and with little accountability. When questioned whether he supported this measure to position himself better politically by gaining favorable committee assignments, Rep. Bradley cited an adherence to a long held conviction against term limits as his justification for the vote.

I wonder how many beneficiaries of Garrett's handshakes and leaflet drops agree with his conviction against term limits, particularly when the vote arrogates so much power to one man. I hope that that affable, earnest campaigner does not become one of the go-along get-along guys on Beacon Hill whose conviction surfaces only when there is an opportunity to protect or bolster his political standing. It is too early to draw any conclusions based on one vote. But, before Garrett becomes fully indoctrinated as one of the "boys" on Beacon Hill let him heed the example of the gracious lady in who's seat he now occupies, that in serving us he may serve himself.

Technology position

TO THE EDITOR:

We are a group of people who are concerned about the decision to reinstate the full-time Technology position, as it is currently defined, at the Osgood School. We want to state for the record that we support School Committee member Stephanie Noble's stance on the issue, and will continue to question and explore the role of technology at the K-2 level.

Police union upset with selectmen

police departments in the United States not to benefit from the COPS program, but also we may not be fortunate enough to receive another one. A lot of time and effort, on the part of one of the detectives, was put in to applying for this grant and we think it would be a poor decision not to take advantage of it. The town's cost for the first year of this grant is under $15,000.

We urge the members of the Board of Selectmen to open its eyes to what we have described in this letter and to work towards solving some of the problems. Please join Chief Noonan and Town Manager Mark Haddad in their continuing efforts to bring this police department up to acceptable standards. We also ask the citizens of this community who care about public safety and would like to have a competent police department that has the most basic equipment at their disposal, to contact the Board and make their feelings known.

To the majority of the members of the Board of Selectmen that do consistently support the police department your efforts don't go unnoticed. We would like to sincerely thank you for your past and continued support.

Kimball's hearing unnecessary

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A week after selectmen voted to expand Kimball's By the Sea liquor license to include parties on the outdoor patio, it turns out the vote wasn't necessary — the condition was already on the license.

"It was an oversight on my part," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "We didn't need to hold that hearing."

Selectmen, who act as the town's licensing board, called for the hearing after a number of Border and Summer Street residents complained of loud noise from outdoor parties coming from the waterfront hotel.

At the hearing, attended by Kimball's By the Sea representatives Jane McCombs and Joe Campbell, Haddad told selectmen that out of 10 noise complaints received by the Cohasset Police Department regarding Kimball's, only one was about an outdoor party. Five calls were from guests complaining about other guests.

Selectmen voted to extend the liquor license to cover outdoor receptions, but reminded the hotel to abide by the town's new noise regulations, that require no noise to be heard at the abutting property after a certain hour.

However, the condition already existed on the license. A copy of a license for Kimball's approved in December of 1997 says that liquor may be served in the various guest rooms "cellar, main function room, swimming pool, first-floor garden view, patio, first-floor harbor view patio, second-floor pool roof patio, connecting lobbies…"

It's a good thing too, because if the condition hadn't already been on the license, selectmen would have been in violation of Alcohol Beverages Control Commission laws. State law requires a licensing board to notify abutters when it is considering expanding liquor license conditions. For the Jan. 23 meeting, the town did not.

"I made a mistake," said Haddad. "If the condition was not in the license, the selectmen would've had to hold a new hearing."

Kimball's Manager McCombs, said the hotel hosts more than 30 wedding receptions a year.

BUSINESS NOTES

New salon

Adrian Morris and Karen Oronte are pleased to announce last week's opening of their new salon, Adrian Morris, at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset village. The salon is located across from the Post Office in the antique pie-shaped building previously occupied by Hallmark 100.

Partner Adrian Morris is a former member of the Sebastian National Design Team, and has worked as a stylist on the South Shore for the past 10 years. Morris specializes in color correction and hair coloring.

Morris is joined by South Shore stylists Karen Oronte and Michele Murdock. Morris and Oronte welcome any visitors who may want to stop into the salon and have a look around.

According to Morris, the partners "want to be known for great hair color and great hair cuts in an intimate, friendly atmosphere."

LIBRARY CORNER

February vacation fun listings

The Cohasset Dramatic Club, in conjunction with the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will present a tea for children ages 6 and up during the school vacation on Thursday, Feb. 22, at 1 p.m. at the library.

The cast of the current dramatic club production, "How to Eat Like a Child," will be on hand to entertain all who attend. Originally written for TV, this fast-paced musical revue takes you through a romp into the joys and sorrows of being a child and consists of 23 funny lessons on how to behave like a child.

Call the library at 383-1348 to sign up. Attendance will be limited to the first 50 children who are registered.

Museum passes

As February school vacation approaches, please remember the following passes are offered to all Cohasset residents:

The museum passes funded by the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library are: The Museum of Fine Arts; Boston Children's Museum; The Computer Museum; John F. Kennedy Library & Museum; The New England Aquarium; The Museum of Science, and The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum.

Other passes to Plimoth Plantation and to the USS Constitution are available and are a gift of Lucille McLoughlin.

An information sheet about the museums, including addresses, hours and phone numbers is available at the front desk. Call the library 24 hours ahead at 383-1348 to secure passes.

Are You Ready for "The Shift"?

Dear Friends,

Here at Charlotte's Salon, our goal is to stay on the cutting edge of style. After all, you've come to expect the highest quality and most up-to-date techniques from our stylists, nail technicians and aestheticians. That's why I'm so excited about our most recent Advanced Class at The Redken Exchange, Fifth Avenue, New York City, and the great new hair cut we have to offer - exclusively at Charlotte's.

Our entire styling team has been trained in the newest New York Technique, "The Shift." The innovative cutting method makes it possible for us to completely restructure your style, adding texture, shape and volume. The cut allows us to redistribute the weight of your hair, so it moves easily and falls naturally into the shape you want.

The Shift works for all hair types - fine hair achieves fullness, heavy hair becomes more manageable. The result: a great cut that's easy to maintain, and always looks great. Since it's tailored specifically to your hair, The Shift takes about twice as long as a traditional cut, so when you make your next hair cut appointment be sure to let us know you'd like to try this new cutting technique.

The Shift: One hour, one wonderful cut, only at Charlotte's.

What a great way to start the new millennium.

Best wishes,
Charlotte

Technology position

teachers and administration at our schools and do not wish to be perceived as antagonistic. What we are trying to do is raise awareness and spark discussion on the importance of technology at different grades; the question of computer labs vs. technology integrated into the classrooms; and the issue of how technology is prioritized now and in the near future in Cohasset public schools.

Technology is a tool, not an end in itself. We are wary of overemphasizing the importance of technology in relation to other core subjects and the arts. And we want to make sure the deployment of technology resources reflects the different developmental and educational needs of our students.

"We question why classroom sizes remain too high, 4th grade chorus is cut, and there's a proposal to cut high school band from the curriculum and turn it into an after-school activity, while teaching technology in grades K-2 is seen as a high priority. While the latter two examples may have more to do with scheduling than budget, we feel it's important to look at how areas are prioritized throughout the school system. We worry about national trends showing stagnating school library book purchases. This year Kindergartners have only half a year of music, due to budget cutbacks. Next year we hope to be able to reinstate a full year of music for Kindergartners, plus a full year of computer. But what about the year after that? If money is tight, what will be cut?"

We are parents who believe that, during school hours, K-2 children should be writing with pencils, not keyboards; drawing with crayons, not KidPix; and performing science experiments with their hands rather than watching them done on a computer screen. They should be figuring things out, making mistakes, learning what a process is, not having information processed for them. We believe that writing in long-hand, though more laborious than keyboarding, is important for developing eye-hand coordination and forming important neural connections. We want our young children involved in work and play that has been tried and tested and deemed to be developmentally appropriate and enriching; we would like to raise awareness of the growing number of academics who feel that exposure to computers at a young age can be actually detrimental. Educational psychologist Jane Healy, author of "Failure to Connect: How Computers Affect Our Children's Minds—for Better and Worse" states that "For certain types of learning, mental habits such as motivation, perseverance, concentration, and certainly reading and language skills, everything we know suggests that this technology may do more harm than good."

Some of us are professionals working in the fields of educational and consumer technology who understand the exciting possibilities brought forth by the Internet and digital media. However, we question the value of computer labs in grades K-2, and the time, resources, and efforts taken away from more critical core subjects like reading, math, and science.

Some of us are involved in the arts and are concerned about research showing the alarming trend of school systems across the country cutting music and art programs in order to invest in expensive computer technology.

Some of us feel more neutral about technology at the elementary school age but feel that, given limited budgets and the limited amount of time kids spend at school, this is precious time taken away from more important and enriching offerings. We feel that technology money at the K-2 level should be used in the most efficient way possible—to train teachers to use computers in their own classrooms, to enhance their lessons, rather than sending children to a computer lab. We also acknowledge that there are children at Osgood with learning disabilities who may benefit from the use of computer technology, and we by all means support their access to it.

All of us feel that this is an important issue that warrants further discussion, and we hope to be able to take part in some sort of forum where many perspectives are considered in a thoughtful and constructive manner.

In September 2000, both Newsweek and U.S. News & World Report featured major articles on the detrimental effects of childhood computer use. Both were prompted in part by a statement issued by the child-advocacy group Alliance for Children, calling for a moratorium on the further introduction of computers in early childhood and elementary education. The statement was signed by a coalition of 75 experts in the fields of education, psychology, neurology, and technology, including Harvard professor of psychiatry Alvin Poussaint and Marilyn Benoit, M.D., President-Elect of the American Academy of Child & Adolescent Psychiatry. Here are some excerpts from the Alliance's report:

"Must five-year-olds be trained on computers today to get the high-paying jobs of tomorrow?

"The technology in schools today will be obsolete long before five-year-olds graduate. Creativity and imagination are the prerequisites for innovative thinking, which will never be obsolete.

As Sherry Turkle, a professor of the sociology of science at MIT and a longtime observer of children's use of computers, has said regarding the use of technology in schools, "The possibilities of using this thing poorly so outweigh the chance of using it well, it makes people like us, who are fundamentally optimistic about computers, very reticent."

Of course there are proponents of technology in elementary schools who argue otherwise. But because the faction of parents that is behind reinstating the Osgood technology position has been so strong and so vocal, we present these other views as food for thought.

Joanne & Alex Adkins,

Skippers reign supreme in 'biggest week'

Boys edge SSL contenders Norwell and Carver to get within a game of first

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Within three days, the Cohasset boys basketball team beat the top two teams in the South Shore League, Carver and Norwell, to move within a single game out of the league lead.

"We knew right off the get-go that this was going to be the toughest week of the season," asserted tenth year head coach Ron Ford. "And they could not have come up any bigger than they did."

The Skippers 66-65 win over first place Carver came on what Ford considered "the best finish of a game" he has coached in his career at Cohasset.

With the Skippers trailing 65-62 in the final seconds, senior captain Doug O'Brien hit what appeared to be a three pointer, but the officials were right on the play, and called it a two.

"Doug's foot was on the line," admitted Ford, who was also right next to the play when it occurred. "[The referee] made a phenomenal call, but everyone on the team thought it was tied."

It was not tied, however, which forced the Skippers to quickly foul junior forward Nate Frazier, who led the Crusaders with 18 points, with four seconds left.

Frazier missed his free throws to the delight of the Skippers faithful, and O'Brien quickly got the ball up-court, and fed it to senior captain TJ Bilodeau for two as time expired.

Though Carver contended that the shot left Bilodeau's hands after the buzzer, the home crowd stormed the court to congratulate their team.

Not to detract from Cohasset's outstanding effort against #2 ranked division three team in the state, but the Crusaders were playing shorthanded, with senior center Tim Ryan sidelined with an injury.

"They had to go to a much smaller lineup," Ford noted, when asked about the absence of the powerful six-foot-five pivot man. "Taking away their low post threat really changes them as a team."

Cohasset defeated the Clippers of Norwell last Tuesday for the second time this year, 70-67. Emotions were running high for this matchup, especially since Cohasset had knocked off the Clippers 73-71 in overtime earlier this year.

Cohasset and Norwell traded basket for basket in the early stages of the game, until a 15-2 Norwell run turned an three point Skipper lead into a 30-20 deficit.

But Cohasset did not let up, pulling to within six by halftime.

With the help of seven three pointers from senior captains Erik Shea and TJ Bilodeau, the Skippers jumped back on top quickly after the break, and held that lead for the majority of the second half. However, they were unable to amass a lead of more than five for the most part.

Every time Norwell would try to surge back in front of their raucous home crowd, they were repelled by

Special athletes can teach us much

EXTRA POINTS
WITH MIKE SPELLMAN

As I was scanning the sports pages the other day, a perfunctory exercise I perform with ever waning zeal, and was assailed by case after case of athletes behaving badly — Marcus Camby, Gary Payton, Jason Kidd, Mark Chmura… never mind Rae Carruth — it struck home more than usual what a polluted landscape the pro sports scene has become.

It also brought home just how lucky I, as someone who desperately wants to cling to a positive perception of athletics, am to be involved with an organization like Special Olympics.

Two years ago, my hometown of Plymouth had no Special Olympics program. When my wife and I made inquiries on behalf of our oldest son, Tim, we were told that the closest program we could get him involved with operated out of Marshfield

Fortunately, it was at about this time that Caryl Cristani, a special needs aid in the Plymouth school system who had started down this path prior to us, finally got fed up with the shrugging shoulders and endless buck passing. She decided to take matters into her own hands.

Although Caryl's children are adults, and she had no experience working with the "challenged" outside of the schools, she volunteered to take on the enormous task of starting the program herself. I quickly agreed to coach. We started out with approximately a dozen Special Olympians, and today we have more than 30.

And, every week when we get together, I am reminded in the purest sense of all that is great about sports: genuine camaraderie, spirit of cooperation, a sense of belonging, love of the sport and "friendly" competition.

In the fall, we concentrate on getting ready for our outdoor soccer tournaments. In the winter, we move on to the candlepin bowling season. It's then back to soccer for the indoor campaign in the spring, and on to softball in the summer. So these kids are a big part of my life year-round.

You see, at times like this, when my patience with sports is wearing thin, I am buoyed by the thought of all the wonderful Plymouth kids this program has helped. For reasons I'm sure you'll understand, I've chose not to use their names in this forum.

I think of one boy who suffers from cerebral palsy. As a result, this 13-year-old has considerable speech and physical limitations. His mind, however, is completely unaffected. I often think about what a cruel irony this is: his being quite capable of discerning all that is wrong with him. Amazingly, however, I don't think I've ever known a kid whose quicker with a smile or laugh. In fact, he is often the first to laugh at himself. The other day when a candlepin ball slipped out of his hand on release, popped over the gutter and proceeded to knock down four pins in the adjacent lane, we all laughed, he the loudest of all.

Cohasset wrestlers hope to surprise

Several Skippers appear primed for sectionals

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

For the majority of local wrestling teams, this time of the year is, first and foremost, about maximizing individual readiness for the state tourney.

Like most teams, Cohasset is no longer in the running for a league title, which actually gives coach Torin Sweeney an advantage in preparing his wrestlers for the sectionals, which get underway this Friday at Foxboro High School .

Sophomore Terry Baroudi compiled a 17-5 record in the 130 pound weight class before dislocating his shoulder a few weeks ago. If the Skippers were in the hunt for a league crown, he might have hurried back, running the risk of re-injuring it and then missing the sectionals. As things stand, though, sitting him until then was a no brainer for coach Sweeney.

"Wrestling really is an individual sport," appraised Sweeney, in his 10th year running the C.H.S program. "Getting each of your wrestlers as ready as they can be for

C.H.S. lacrosse captain makes mark at national indoor championships

Ronan Buick, co-captain of Cohasset High's 2001 varsity boys' lacrosse team, was one of 14 statewide all-stars selected to play for Team Massachusetts at the National High School Indoor Lacrosse Championships held January 13-15 in Hightstown, New Jersey.

Buick, selected for the second time, scored six goals and picked up three assists competing against the top junior and senior players in the country.

Massachusetts knocked off teams from Pittsburgh and New Jersey, and finished eighth in the 12-team event. Three of its losses came by a goal apiece, including a tight 10-9 contest with highly-regarded Philadelphia.

"Ronan was selected in part because he's one of the strongest defenders at midfield in the state," said Massachusetts coach Burke Walker, the director of Top Gun Lacrosse. "The fact he was able to give us a solid offensive contribution was a big bonus."

The Massachusetts team included players from both private and public schools. Among Buick's teammates were three other South Shore players — Tripp Neville, Jon Sisto and Brian Prescott of Duxbury, and Hingham's Justin Burns.

"It was a nice honor being chosen for this team again," said Buick, who led the Skippers in scoring last year with 25 goals and 15 assists, "It feels good to go up against some of the best competition in the country and do okay."

Buick's success continues that of Cohasset players in statewide competition. Last summer, three Skipper starters— Buick, and juniors Paul

Hockey team still in playoff hunt

With big win over Norwell, Skippers now need wins in four of remaining five

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

At 6-8-1, the Cohasset High boys hockey team can still qualify for the state tournament. And veteran coach Dennis Walsh still believes his squad can win the necessary four of five final games to make it into the post-season.

"They are all games that they can win" asserted Walsh, who is in his 32nd and final year as coach of the Skippers. "And if they don't win them, then they don't deserve to be in the states."

Indeed, Cohasset has at least a very competitive game to each of their final five opponents.

This season, the Skippers have already beaten two of the teams they have left, Rockland and Foxboro, and had a three goal lead on a third, Trinity Catholic, before losing 6-5.

"The teams that we are playing, we have played very closely," noted a grinning Walsh.

With a 5-0 win on Friday over league rival Norwell, the Skippers kept themselves in contention for state tournament qualification. Though the score read 4-0 after two periods, Walsh would have liked to have seen his team continue to press.

"We could have scored a lot more goals," said Walsh. "But [the Clippers] were skating very well."

However, Walsh used the multiple goal cushion to give a few of his less experienced underclassmen some varsity ice time before the end of the season, possibly to ready them for the tourney.

"I like to do that when we get up three or four goals," affirmed Walsh, who played hockey in col-

Previte and Kyle Weber — played key roles on the silver medal-winning South squad in the Bay State Games. Buick was also selected as a Pilgrim Conference all-star in 2000, and is currently being recruited by several colleges in Divisions One and Three.

He's already been accepted at Division 3 schools Roanoke and Bryant, but is holding out hope for a possible scholarship offer from a Division 1 school. Providence and Lafayette are two D1 schools that have expressed some interest.

Buick is far from a solo sport standout. The C.H.S senior was the leading tackler for the Skippers football team this past fall as the team's middle linebacker, and was the named to the Mariner All-Scholastic Football team.

Lacrosse is clearly his #1 sport passion, however. He started playing the sport seven years ago, attracted to it, he says, by the "fast pace and high scoring."

lege at Xavarian of Quebec.

In the game, sophomore center Matt Davis, who is second on the team in scoring behind fellow sophomore center Greg O'Connell, scored a hat trick to go along with an assist. O'Connell kept pace, recording a goal and a helper, as did junior defenseman Eric Libby.

Another recent rival match-up featured a hard fought battle against Hull.

As in the Norwell game, the Skippers jumped out to an early lead, but the Pirates fought back to even the score at 3-3 in the third period.

Hull then slipped one past junior goalie Dan Kinchla with thirty seconds remaining in regulation for the win.

Walsh has been pleased with his "back-ice" play, though, as the team allowed only three goals for most of the game, and permitted just three against state champion contenders Hanover (14-0-1).

"My goalie has played well, my defense has played well— they have done a good job," appraised Walsh.

Skipper scoring in the game featured two goals by junior wing Pete Whoriskey, while O'Connell recorded the third goal of the day.

Cohasset's other two games are against Scituate (10-5)— who barely snuck past the Skippers in the first go round, 6-5, but have won their last five games in a row— and South Boston, who beat the Skippers 5-1 back on Dec. 22.

a crushing three pointer. The two captains combined for 7-for-7 shooting from long range in the second half, making them 10-for-13 for the game.

"As the smallest team in the league, we need something to counteract that," said Ford, who watched 33 of his 70 points come from downtown.

Bilodeau finished with 25 points to go with four assists, while Shea connected for 17 points with three steals.

"That was unbelievable for them," effused Ford of the duo's shooting performance. "But that is what you expect from your seniors."

Cohasset's inside game was as dominant as it has been all year, with sophomore power forward Ben Lynner collecting 14 points and 13 rebounds, including five off the offensive glass in the second half alone.

Muscling in the paint with defenders much bigger and taller than himself, Lynner was able to find a way to clear space time and time again. He shot 5-of-6 from the floor, with no misses on four attempts from the free throw line, including two huge ones in a one-and-one situation in the final seconds.

"Benny finishes very well," assessed Ford, of his field goal percentage leader. "He is an excellent free throw shooter, and he does well on the boards for us. He does not get a lot of shots, but he makes the most of them."

Still, the Clippers hung around, getting big second half help from a variety of offensive threats.

Norwell's main weapon, sophomore Gerry Corcoran, who leads the South Shore League with 23.9 points per game, was limited to a mere six points in the first half on two threes, as the shooting guard was forced to sideline with foul trouble.

"We were fortunate to get their best player in foul trouble," acknowledged Ford, who also noted that Norwell went on their 15-2 first half run with Corcoran on the bench. "But it could have been worse if he had been in thegame."

Shea and junior forward Nick Bolster did a terrific job face guarding Corcoran the whole game, holding the sophomore to 6-of-16 shooting.

Down the stretch, Doug O'Brien again hit a clutch shot, a driving layup through traffic that put Cohasset up 67-65 less than 30 seconds remaining.

Corcoran later tied the game with two fouls shots, making the long range sniper just 4-for-8 from the charity stripe for the game.

A Bilodeau three sealed the game. A desperation court long inbounds pass with one second showing was knocked away by Shea .

Norwell, who fell to 9-5 with the loss, got big contributions from Bob Savoy (17 points) and Mike Mohan (13 points), but it was not enough to get by the Skippers, who are now in second place in the South Shore League, a half game behind Carver.

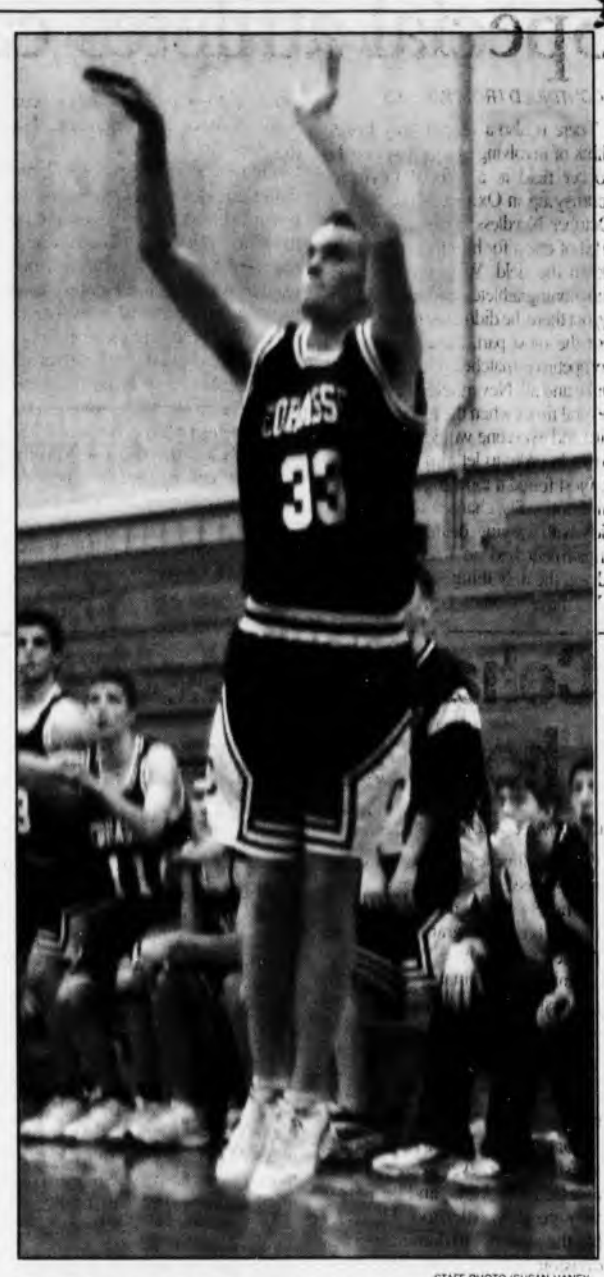
In fact, as the SSL stands right now, five teams— Carver, Cohasset, Norwell, Norton and Abington are separated by two games. And if the state tournament had started the day after the Carver win, Cohasset would have been seeded seventh out of 31 division three teams in the South Sectional.

"We are probably looking at Norton or East Bridgewater (for a first round match-up, and neither one of them interests me much," said Ford.

Game Notes

Norwell

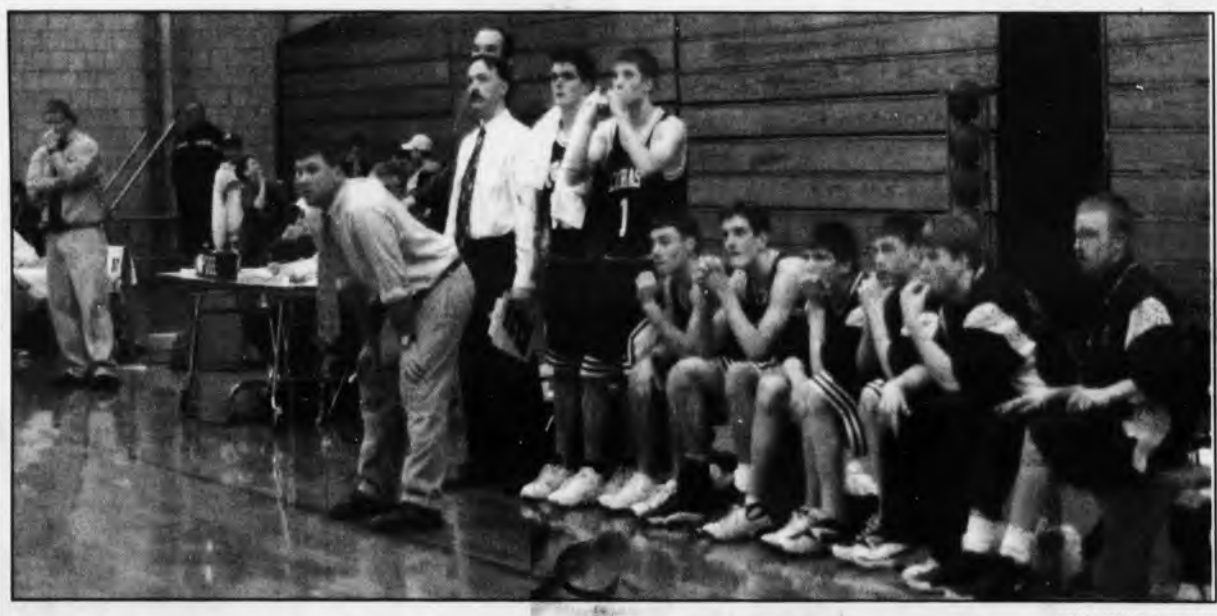
-Ben Lynner recorded his third double-double of the year. No one else on the team has one.



-Though Shea and Bilodeau were 7-for-7 from 3-range, they hit on only 3-of-7 attempts from inside the arc.

-Cohasset had 16 turnovers in the first half, three in the second, and their first in the second half did not come until more than halfway through.

Carver



-This marked the fourth time the outcome of a Cohasset game has been decided in the final minute, with the Skippers taking all four decisions (73-71 over Norwell, 64-63 over Norton, 70-67 over Norwell, and 66-65 over Carver.)

-This was Cohasset's first Friday win since December 22 over Norton.

Special athletes can teach us much about sports, life

There is also a special story I often think of involving this teenager on the soccer field at a Special Olympics tourney up in Oxford, Mass. back in October. Needless to say, it took quite a bit of effort for him to move up and down the field. With several higher functioning athletes, at least physically, out there, he didn't see much action. For the most part, these were highly competitive matches, with medals at stake and all. Nevertheless, there were several times when the ball rolled near him and everyone would stop or slow down in order to let him get a shot at it. I just found it touching that, even in an emotionally charged setting, these kids with varying degrees of mental impairment had an innate sense for "doing the right thing."

We have another boy in the program, a 15-year-old who has been with us since the beginning. His developmental challenges are no where near as severe as the majority of the kids in the program. He takes a few regular education classes and he made the school's freshmen soccer team last year. Obviously, he's our main man in the fall and spring soccer tourneys. His personal growth over the last two years has just been amazing. Kind of shy and standoffish in the beginning, he is now as much a coach as an athlete. He works with several of the younger players on their skills, and is always the first one to offer words of encouragement when he senses frustration in one of his teammates.

Speaking of climbing out of the shell, there's another pair of boys whose voices I never even heard during their first few months in the program. Now, they both goof on me, along with so many of their teammates, with regularity.

I've also got a brother and sister, 16 and 14, respectively, who have been with us since day one. In addition to their developmental obstacles, these two have recently suffered a significant personal crisis, one that would probably floor most people I know. However, not only do this brother and sister endure, but I'm here to contend that you'd have a tough time finding two teenagers who more completely exude a love of life.

Then, of course, there's my own son, Tim. He suffered a pair of strokes during delivery for reasons that have never really come clear. The result was a significant amount of damage to his right hemisphere, hindering him both mentally and physically. I coached him in town youth soccer and basketball up until the age of nine, by which point keeping up competitively simply became too great an obstacle (though I will report with some pride that he was among the best pure shooters in the basketball league).

Removing him from these programs was heart-wrenching, because he is a certifiable sports nut. He almost always outlasts his brothers and I shooting baskets or hitting and throwing the baseball around, and sporting events are about the only thing on TV he considers worthwhile. He also asks to go with me to virtually every sporting event I choose to cover in the course of my job, and talks to me endlessly about what he remembers from these various contests.

Tim created his own special sports memory this fall at the state Special Olympics soccer tourney in Oxford when he scored the game-winning goal for us in the final period on a booming kick from 30 feet out into the top right hand corner of the net, clinching our silver medal. I honestly don't think any parent of any athlete could have been happier or prouder over an athletic feat than I was at that moment in time.

And, of course, the athletes are only part of this uplifting equation. I also think of all of the volunteers who've helped our program grow, adults, young adults and kids alike. It would be impossible to adequately express appreciation for all that these selfless people have down and are still doing. However, there are two in particular who I simply must mention: Sarah Thomas and Adam Sternberg, both of them sophomores at Plymouth North High School. These two volunteered to join the program on Day 1 after somehow hearing about Caryl's efforts. They have been helpful beyond words in helping us bond with our special athletes.

These two were young teenagers when they signed on to help, and I guess I assumed we'd lose them to other interests as they got more involved in high school life. I underestimated them. Both Sarah and Adam do indeed have interests you'd expect of kids their age—for instance, Adam was on the JV soccer team this fall. I guess there's no other way to say it: these kids amaze me. Indeed, it humbles me when I think of myself at their age as your run of the mill self-interested dope.

The biggest debt of gratitude, of course, goes to Caryl. With absolutely no interest in this beyond the belief that something like this should be done for these very special kids, and nothing to gain other than a stronger feeling of self worth, Caryl coaches these kids, coordinates all events, fights for facility usage, provides transportation, handles all of the mailing, billing, uniform purchases and a few other things I'm sure I don't even know about that are essential to keep this program moving. I just show up and clown around with these kids, try to pass along a few tips here and there, and she still tells people that we both run the program. Obviously, she is not in this for any type of political gain either.

Oh yeah, lastly I guess I should thank Messieurs Camby, Payton, Kidd, Chmura, Carruth, et al for providing me with the impetus for finally writing this column that has been kicking around in my head for far too long. These dolts helped me realize how silly my own concerns were for appearing too preachy or even self absorbed in writing this column, especially when placed against the importance of telling some truly great stories about some truly great people who, I might add, deserve to have their stories told a hell of a lot more than these guys do.

Cohasset wrestlers hope to surprise

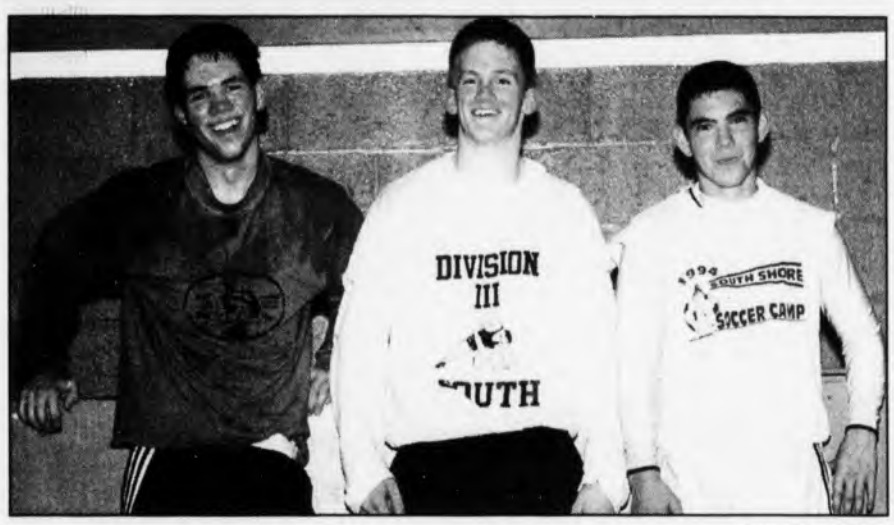
the state tourney is really what the season becomes about now."

And Sweeney does indeed feel that he has a few grapplers who are primed and ready.

Junior Dan Littauer carries the greatest degree of hope into the sectionals, entering in the 145 pound class. Since dropping from 151 to 145, Littauer has gone a perfect 16-0 on the mat. Before that, he was a solid 7-3 at 151.

"Dan is one of the strongest wrestlers I've ever seen at 145," assessed Sweeney, "and he's just a very good wrestler too. He really has the potential to dominate in this division."



Any wrestler who finishes with a personal record of over .500 was to be seeded at the Division 3 coaches conference at Foxboro High on Wednesday. Littauer and Baroudi should receive high seedings, while freshman Phil Strazulla (14-9) at 112, senior Dan Duffy (18-10) at 135, and sophomore Mike Casey (12-11) at 160 will also be seeded.

Casey is a wrestler who has improved noticeably over the course of season, even notching a few wins "wrestling up" at 171 pounds recently. Sweeney said he would not be surprised to see this soph give a high seed all he can handle early on.

"Mike just seems to get better every time out," Sweeney reported. "He could be a darkhorse going into this thing."

All Division 3 wrestlers are eligible for the sectionals, and Sweeney plans on bringing his full compliment to Foxboro on Friday. The unseeded wrestlers will be pitted against the higher seeds to start the competition. From this group of under .500 wrestlers, Sweeney figures his seniors— Bea Rankin at 119, John Hertzig at 125 and Justin Langham — have the best shot of surprising, the latter in particular.

Langham, a team captain, missed much of the season with injury and illness and wound up finishing just under .500 in one of the area's toughest weight classes (140 pounds). Sweeney is going to hold off placing him in a weight class until he checks out the competition at 140 and the two surrounding weight classes.

Cohasset wrestling coach Torin Sweeney has high hopes for his captains heading into Friday's Division 3 sectionals at Foxboro High School: (L-R) Dan Duffy, Dan Littauer and Justin Langham

"Justin is a good wrestler and he has a chance to sneak up on some people as an unseeded wrestler," said Sweeney. "I'd like to give him the best shot possible."

The top six finishers in each weight class will advance to the State Finals, which get underway next Friday.

Before Wednesday's season ending meet with Carver, the Skippers won their last three meets. On Wednesday, they got the better of Norwell, 53-18. Strazulla recorded a pin, Casey a technical fall (15-0) and Rankin and Chris McKenna (140 pounds) both earned wins on points.

On Friday, the Cohasset squad beat both Wellesley, 48-18, and Middleboro 42-39, in a tri-meet. Sophomore Dave Kupsc recorded his first ever varsity pin versus Middleboro at 103 to get the Skippers a quick 6-0 lead that proved huge in the four point meet win. Duffy also recorded a pin in his match.

EXTENDED HOURS FEBRUARY VACATION

Last chance for soiree tickets

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

The Hingham Symphony Orchestra Kidconcert came to the Osgood School. The HSO, led by conductor Jin Kim, played three pieces of music and then took part in an instrument showcase at which students were able to ask questions. In the photo, Osgood students line up to see how the veena is played.

Hello Everyone, I hope that this finds everyone healthy and getting ready for February Vacation! The schools are certainly very busy these days with many exciting events taking place. Try to make some time in your day once in a while to go to your child's school and see what is going on, it is amazing to see the constant action and activities that go on in a day.

For all of you that have said that going to the St. Valentines Soiree being held this Saturday night from 7-11 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club would be a lot of fun but forgot to get a ticket, here is one last chance to do so. This event, being sponsored by the Cohasset PSO is down to the very last tickets. If you would like a ticket for this fun-filled evening with music, dancing and socializing, call Janeen Culhane at 383-2349. Tickets are $40 per person or $75 per couple. Also, the wonderful Chinese Baskets are beautiful this year, thanks to the wonderful donations from students, parents and staff. With the wonderful support from the school staff and the great Basket Creators, these are truly "works of art" filled with all kinds of items and goodies. If you would like to purchase tickets for these before the drawing being held at the dance, please contact me at 923-1057 or mail your donations to 622 CJC Highway, Cohasset MA, 02025. Each ticket is $1 and it certainly goes to a great cause.

The Hingham Symphony Orchestra recently performed at the Osgood School for all the children and a wonderful time was had by all. The Hingham Symphony Orchestra is holding a Discovery Concert, "Green Eggs and Ham" narrated by ZOOM member, Kaleigh. This great family event is Saturday, Feb 10 and Sunday, Feb 11 at 3:00 p.m. It is being held in Hingham at Sanborn Auditorium, Hingham Town Hall, 220 Central St. and costs $15 for adults and $10 for children under 18. Tickets are available at Cards & Shards in Cohasset and Nobles in Hingham with discounts for groups of 5 or more. For more information, call HSO at 740-5694.

Recently, Joseph Osgood School students and families participated in a special book donation program called "Spread the Word." Governor Cellucci and his wife Jan began this program in 1995 as a way to collect books from children who no longer need them, and distribute them to children who have few or no books of their own at home. Our books were shared with more than 200 children from the Mozart School in Roslindale! According to the students in Beth Owens-Rigby's class, the coordinators of our efforts, "During November and December, we sorted and counted 2,134 books. We donated 1,678 books to the Department of Education! They were given to a school in Roslindale, Mass. where kids don't have many of their own books at home. We are donating the other 456 books to pre-schools and homeless shelters for families. We received a special certificate from the Commissioner of Education for all our hard work." Coincidentally, a week after we shipped off our donations, we were bestowed with a donation of approximately 2,000 brand-new discontinued Dorling-Kindersly books! Paul Kennedy, a new parent to the Osgood, coordinated this contribution. Books will be going to all three school libraries and all Osgood classrooms, as well as the Paul Pratt Library and pre-schools in town. We want to thank the Kennedy family and all Osgood families for their thoughtfulness and support. As we learned from Pinocchio, "What is given is always returned. We are in this world to help one another." (C. Collodi-1883) What a true statement that is and what a great accomplishment for our students to have done. It sure did make a difference!

The PSO is seeking candidates for two-year terms for the 2001-2003 term on the school council in all three schools. This is a wonderful way to serve the schools for anyone who may be interested. If you do have an interest in this, please send your name and a paragraph about yourself and why you would like to serve to: PSO Nomination Committee, c/o Susan Biddle Jaffe, 10 Wood Way, Cohasset Ma, 02025 or email to SBJaffe@aol.com. The deadline for this is Feb. 12.

A public hearing is being held this evening on the school budget at the Middle/High School library. This is the time and the opportunity to add any more input you may have to the budget. If you want to be heard and recognized and have some input to give, make sure to head to the Middle/High School tonight at 7:30.

The Middle School is looking for some parents, who would like to work in the Middle School office for 2-3 hours per month, answering telephones,helping teachers with projects, possibly some light typing etc. If this interests you, please call Helen Daley at 383-2978.

CALLING ALL HOCKEY FANS! During the month of February, the Cohasset Varsity Hockey Team will be selling raffle tickets to the March 24, 1 p.m. SOLD OUT Bruins game against the Colorado Avalanche! This is a totally sold-out game and the tickets are very much sought after. The winner will receive a pair of premium seating, club section tickets to the March 24 game valued at $150. Raffle tickets cost $5 each and the winner will be drawn on Sunday, March 4. Proceeds will be used to benefit the Cohasset High School Varsity Hockey Program. So all you hockey fans, support our Varsity Hockey Team and buy a raffle ticket from any of the Varsity players or, call any of the Hockey Boosters to purchase a ticket: Jo-Ann Pilczak-383-0268 Trish Morse, 383-1622 Chris Straughn, 383-9857 Shelanne Durkin, 383-9225 Ann Rasmussen, 383-1907 You may be the lucky person sitting in the Premium seating section watching this sold-out game. The Hockey Boosters sincerely thank Mike O'Connell for donating these tickets and making this fundraising event possible.

Well, that is it for this week. If you have any news, events or any items that are school related, please send them to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com or ATSchoolsIn@aol.com, mail them to me at 622 CJC Highway or phone them in at 923-1057. Have a great week!

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Volunteers wanted to assist CMHS prepare for evaluation

Cohasset Middle High School is looking for parent and community volunteers to assist teachers, administrators, support staff, and students prepare for the formal evaluation process it will go through in the fall of 2002.

The New England Association of Schools and Colleges requires its member schools to undergo a self-study and formal evaluation at least once every ten years to receive accreditation. Accordingly, the Cohasset School Committee has set aside some time for the professional staff to begin and complete this work. Students in grades 7-12 will be dismissed early (11:20 a.m.) on the following days: Feb. 8, March 13 and April 11. There will be no school - all day - for students (K-12) on May 7 while the professional staff continues its work. In addition, there will be approximately 10 dates during the 2001-2002 school year when students again will be dismissed early so that the staff can continue this work.

Parents and community members who are interested in assisting with this self-study process and are available to serve on one of several subcommittees (such as Curriculum, Instruction, Leadership and Organization, Community Resources, etc.) on the dates and times mentioned above, should please contact the high school (383-6107) and leave your name at your earliest convenience. Mrs. Marie Schleiff and Dr. Michael Gill, co-chairs of the Steering Committee, will coordinate the committee assignments.

Pilgrim Arena offers scholarships

Applications for 10-$2,000 scholarships are available (starting Wednesday, Feb. 14) at the Pilgrim Skating Arena, 75 Recreation Park Drive in Hingham.

This is the 28th consecutive year the Pilgrim Skating Arena is awarding college scholarships to area high school seniors planning to further their education.

Interested seniors must pick up and sign for the application in person at the arena pro shop. Completed applications must be returned by Saturday, March 31.

Applicants will be judged by members of the scholarship committee of the board of directors at Pilgrim Arena.

Police grant

Congressman Bill Delahunt announced that the Justice Department has awarded the Cohasset Police Department $75,000 to help hire an additional full-time officer for three years.

With the latest award, the Tenth Congressional district has received $18.3 million in grants to hire 283 new officers under the federal COPS (Community Oriented Policing Services) program since 1994.

The grant, which covers up to 75 percent of the new officer's salary and benefits for three years, was one of only four awarded across the Commonwealth in the current funding round.

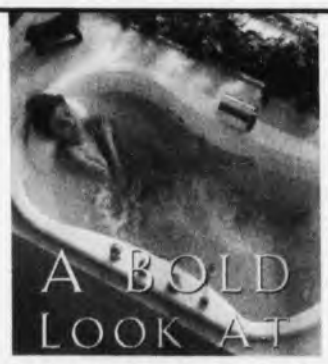
Delahunt, a longtime District Attorney, now serves on the House Judiciary Committee which is expected to consider legislation to extend the COPS grants program when it expires next year.

"This is a well-deserved boost for the community policing efforts in Cohasset and across the South Shore," Delahunt said. "These initiatives deserve much of the credit for the dramatic reduction in violent crime.

OBITUARIES

Charles J. McCormick

Charles J. McCormick, a long time resident of Cohasset and Marshfield died on Jan. 28, 2001.



He was born in Buffalo, N.Y. in 1919 and spent most of his boyhood years on a dairy farm in Youngstown, N.Y. He attended Youngstown High School and went to Springfield College before being called to serve his country in World War II. Stationed for five years in the Pacific theater, Mr. McCormick served with the 37th Infantry Division. Like many of his generation, this experience left an indelible mark on both him and the country that he served, and we will be forever grateful.

Prior to retiring at age 77, he worked for Howard and Richards, Inc. for 25 years as a food broker.

Mr. McCormick leaves two daughters, Mary Jo Duncan of Doylestown, Pa. and Sandy Vickers of Duxbury; a son, Charles (Ian) McCormick of Omaha, Neb.; seven grandchildren, Nathaniel and Jonathan Duncan, Sarah and Jeffrey Vickers and Kaiya, Callan, and Kyle McCormick. He also leaves two sisters, Virginia Chudy of Strongsville, Ohio and Dorothy Kolb of Tonawanda, N.Y. and his former wife, Barbara McCormick of Duxbury.

A memorial service was held at the Shepherd Funeral Home in Kingston.

Donations may be made to Gambro Healthcare, 45 Resnik Road, Plymouth, 02360.

Say it with a song

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

There are lots of way to say you care for someone on Valentine's Day.

You can say it with flowers.

You can say it with chocolates.

If you're really serious, you can say it with jewelry.

Or you can have four guys say it — or rather sing it — for you.

For several years now the South Shore Men of Harmony barbershop chorus has been serenading lovers on Valentine's Day.

"It's always great to see the expression on someone's face when we show up..."It makes a very happy day for someone."

South Shore Men of Harmony member Bill Fitzgerald

Members of the Yankee Ingenuity Quartet of the South Shore Men of Harmony — Tony Daniels, bass of Whitman, Don Taylor, lead of Whitman, Ken Siroonian, and Baritone of Rockland deliver a singing valentine to Fay O'Brien of Pembroke.

"We go anywhere from the Neponset Bridge down the canal," said barbershop chorus member Bill Fitzgerald, of Weymouth. To meet the demand for singing valentines, the chorus divides itself up into quartets for the for the holiday — and a few days leading up to it — bringing their harmonies to unsuspecting folks in their homes, places of work or even while out at to dinner for a romantic Valentine's Day dinner.

The Hingham based chorus which many know locally from their nearly annual performances in Hingham's Cabaret, is part of a much larger national barbershop quartet organization.

"There are more than 32,000 members throughout the United States," Fitzgerald said. Locally, there are 40 members of the South Shore chapter of the Men of Harmony, all of which participate in the various Valentine's Day singing activities.

"We divide ourselves into groups of four," Fitzgerald said. "And we all go around in quartets." Fitzgerald said his group's musical Valentine's Day deliveries will be taking place between Feb. 11 and Feb. 14.

"Within those three days, the Men of Harmony will probably do between 70-100 singing deliveries," Fitzgerald said. "On a national basis within those three days, there will probably be about 800 different quartets doing these deliveries across the country."

Fitzgerald said this is the sixth year that the South Shore chapter of the Men of Harmony have been taking part in the sing-o-gram deliveries.

"It's always great to see the expression on someone's face when we show up," he said. He added quartets deliver their singing Valentines in a wide range of places—business offices, restaurants, and even nursing homes.

"It makes a very happy day for someone," he said.

Fitzgerald said the process having a singing Valentine delivered to someone is easy.

"Just call me up and I'll take the information," Fitzgerald said. He said when a quartet shows up for a given delivery, the recipient is given a red rose, a personalized Valentine's Day message, and two smooth songs sung by an authentic barbershop quartet.

He added that some of the money raised through the sing-o-grams is donated to certain music-oriented charities.

"We've got about two-dozen orders so far," Fitzgerald said, noting he's been taking a number of calls. "People really seem to get into this."

To order a singing Valentine call Fitzgerald at (781) 337-0227 or Rich Barry at (781) 659-7463.

Love, Broadway style

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

With Valentine's Day just around the corner, J.M. Productions is opening its second season of dinner theater at Raffael's in North Quincy with "Broadway in Love," an original revue by the Scituate-based Showstoppers troupe. The show presents romance in all its incarnations through the music and lyrics of some of Broadway's biggest legends.

Showstoppers Producer Douglas A. Trudeau not only serves as director and choreographer for this production, he also returns as a performer after too long an absence from South Shore stages. Trudeau is joined by Donna DeWitt, and his fellow Showstopper alums Bill and Brenda McColgan. The quartet gets things off to a rousing start with a clever Cole Porter Medley of "Let's Fall In Love," "Night and Day," and "You'd Be So Nice To Come Home To."

Solos and duets on a variety of show tunes from the last 50 years follow. Hollywood's contribution to love's landscape is represented by Brenda McColgan's gorgeous rendering of "The Way He Makes Me Feel" from the 1983 feature film "Yentl." Unfortunately, Bill fares less well with the listless "If I Can't Love Her" from the stage version of Disney's "Beauty and the Beast."

Trudeau and the male McColgan also fail to evoke the emotion intended in Stephen Sondheim's "Pretty Women" from "Sweeney Todd." Trudeau's pairing with DeWitt, however, on "Old Fashioned Wedding" from Irving Berlin's "Annie Get Your Gun" scores a musical comedy bullseye. Their voices are also beautifully matched on the Rodgers and Hammerstein classic, "If I Loved You," from "Carousel."

Musical Director Donna Bacherman deftly handles the variety of song styles while never overwhelming the singers.

Playing off their real-life marital status, Bill and Brenda offer satisfying reprises of "When The Kids Get Married" and "Nobody's Perfect" from "I Do, I Do," which the pair performed a few seasons back with Showstoppers. Throughout the show, the musical selections are woven together both with new dialogue and snippets from the actual shows. This is especially effective in the act two opener, "Kids," from "Bye Bye Birdie."

The exploration of parenting continues with Bill's powerful performance of the notoriously difficult "Soliloquy" from "Carousel." Trudeau and DeWitt next take the stage for the inspirational "Wheels of a Dream" from "Ragtime." The ensemble brings this segment to a close with the Sondheim admonition "Children Will Listen" from "Sweeney Todd."

The proceedings are enhanced by costumes which include appropriate formal wear for the serious offerings, period tuxedoes for "Lily's Eyes" from "The Secret Garden" and funky retro garb donned for the humorously touching "Somewhere That's Green" from the off-Broadway cult favorite "Little Shop of Horrors."

Musical Director Donna Bacherman deftly handles the variety of song styles while never overwhelming the singers.

While "Broadway in Love" may be taking worthwhile risks with its song list, it might still have been wise to also include the time-tested works of George Gershwin, Jerome Kern and even Jerry Herman.

("Broadway in Love" will be performed at Raffael's, 1 Enterprise Drive, North Quincy, through Feb. 8. For tickets and informa-

High-roast chicken

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The allure of a high-roast chicken is akin to cold fusion - the results are spectacular, but the technique is allusive. Roasting chicken in a 500-degree oven takes no more than 45 minutes for a 3- to 4-pound bird, and the skin is second to none. The problem is that the breast meat dries out in the hot oven and the resulting smoke is so bad that you think you are on the set of "Backdraft." So how does one get moist meat, great skin, short roasting time, and no smoke?

Two years ago in this column, I suggested quickly brining the chicken to solve the dry breast meat problem. This works just fine. (The chicken is submerged in a solution of water, sugar, and salt for one hour before roasting.) I also found that butterflying the chicken (removing the backbone and pressing it flat) was also helpful since the white and dark meat cooked more evenly. But I was still stymied by the problem of smoke. My original solution was to start the oven at 425 degrees, raising the temperature to 500 degrees halfway through cooking. This produced quite a good bird, but I wanted dark, crispy skin, the holy grail of the high-roast chicken set. For that, I needed a constant 500 degrees.

Adding water to the pan simply made the skin soggy, although it did solve the smoke problem. Thinly sliced potatoes placed underneath the chicken to absorb the drippings is the approach favored by my test kitchen at Cook's Illustrated. It work fine (although the potatoes, served as a side dish, are a bit on the greasy side), but you need potatoes on hand plus great knife skills or a mandoline to slice them.

I was looking for an easier, everyday solution. I tried the same approach using bread cubes and bread slices, both of which burned to a crisp. Cooked rice meant extra work, and it ended up a burnt mess, although it did prevent smoking. A dry kitchen towel started to brown around the edges - this was a walk on the wild side since it might have burst into flames. (A damp towel did not fare much better, and the skin was less crispy.) Damp cheesecloth and paper towels were no better than the kitchen towel. My last test was sliced onions, which prevented smoking and also cooked down to a pleasing garnish. Voila! This was the solution I was looking for, since almost everyone has onions on hand and the onions can be eaten along with the roast chicken.

To perfect this approach, I added to the onions some balsamic vinegar as well as salt, pepper, and a touch of sugar. Because so much fat drips down onto the onions during roasting, I transferred the cooked onions to a mesh strainer to drain off the fat while the chicken rested. (They can also be drained on a bed of paper towels.)

Now there were just a couple of things left to work out. Because this was to be a recipe for high-roast chicken, the oven had to be hot. I tried the chicken at 450 degrees instead of 500 degrees and found that it did not brown as well or as evenly and needed 10 minutes longer to cook. So I decided to stick with the 500 degrees for 40 to 45 minutes. In terms of basting, butter burned, a naked bird lacked flavor, and olive oil added a nice even color without burning. The Cook's test kitchen suggested tucking the legs up to sit between the thigh and breast (the bird is butterflied first), a technique that helps to speed the cooking of the thighs, which otherwise take longer to cook than the breast meat and cause it to overcook.

I also testing letting the brined chicken sit in the refrigerator uncovered for 8 to 24 hours. This does produce extra crispy skin, but it doesn0t seem practical, as the chicken roasted without a long refrigerator stay was just fine.

CRISPY, MOIST HIGH-ROAST CHICKEN

Don't forget to brine the bird, as the breast meat will dry out in the hot oven. This recipe is designed for a 3 1/2-pound bird. Adjust roasting times accordingly for different sizes.

For the brine:

1 cup kosher salt (or 1/2 cup table salt)
1/2 cup sugar
2 quarts cool water

For the chicken:

1 whole chicken 3 1/2 to 4 pounds, preferably Bell and Evans or other free-range variety, giblets removed, trimmed of fat around cavity
2 medium onions cut pole to pole and into 1/4-inch slices, about 3 cups
2 tablespoons balsamic vinegar
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon sugar
Freshly ground black pepper
1 teaspoon olive oil

1. Dissolve salt and sugar in 2 quarts cool water in a bowl (or use a large plastic storage bag) large enough to hold the chicken. Immerse the chicken and refrigerate for 1 hour. Meanwhile, adjust an oven rack to the lower-middle position and heat the oven to 500 degrees. Place onions in the bottom of a broiler pan and add the vinegar, salt, and sugar and toss to coat evenly.

2. Remove chicken from brine and rinse thoroughly under cold water. Remove and discard backbone of chicken by cutting through the bones on either side. (This can best be done with kitchen or poultry shears.) Flip the chicken over and use the heel of your hand to flatten the breastbone. Transfer chicken to broiler pan rack and dry thoroughly with paper towels. Rub chicken with olive oil and sprinkle with pepper. Push the chicken legs up to rest in between the breast and thigh. Place broiler rack onto pan.

3. Roast chicken for 20 minutes, at which time skin will be spotty brown. Rotate the pan 180 degrees and continue to roast until skin has crisped and turned a deep brown and an instant read thermometer registers 160 degrees in thickest part of breast, about 20 to 25 minutes longer. Transfer chicken to cutting board and let rest for 5 to 10 minutes before carving. Using a slotted spoon, remove onions to a mesh strainer or allow to drain on paper towels

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7

This is a day that can go either way. The full moon buildup generates excitement, intensity. Don't be too hasty in your judgements or too eager to commit yourself. Slow down. Avoid mental, physical or emotional burnout. The planet Uranus plays an important role in this period, because it stands within two degrees of the full moon culmination point. Its influence may bring sudden, unexpected breakthroughs or breakdowns. Keep an open mind; go with the flow of things.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8

The full moon culminates at 2:12 a.m., 19 1/2-degrees of Leo/Aquarius. In addition, the planet Uranus aligns with the moon at 4:01 a.m. and with the sun tomorrow. This is a high energy, potentially stressful day. Be sure to take extra time out for yourself, to pursue activities that help you to relax. The Leo moon forms challenging alignments to Saturn, Mars and Mercury until 4:25 p.m., when it becomes inactive. At 6:35 p.m. a Virgo moon takes over.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9

The moon travels in Virgo all day. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Virgo, travels in retrograde and aligns with Mars at 9:59 p.m. In addition, the sun/Uranus alignment occurs at 7:20 a.m., and the moon and Pluto interact at 6:17 p.m. This is a volatile mixture of planetary energies. Don't make waves. Take your time and pay attention to details. Use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Channel high energy constructively.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10

After the barrage of planetary aspects in the past few days, influences calm down considerably this weekend. The moon continues active travel in Virgo until 3:18 p.m., reminding you that compliments will work better than criticism. This period is ideal for organizing, cleaning, getting your life in order. The moon enters Libra at 6:46 p.m. In addition, Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra forms a harmonious contact to Neptune this evening. Love is the name of the game. Sail the love boat to exotic ports.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 11

Today's influences bring a break in the stormy astrological weather we've been experiencing this month. This is a wonderful day to relax and recharge your batteries. Spend quality time with favorite friends; enjoy leisure activities. The moon travels in sociable Libra, forming contacts to Neptune, Venus and Pluto.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12

Alignments of the sun, Mercury and Saturn can make for a high stress day. The best way to channel this energy is to take on a big work project and stay busy. You can be most productive. The moon continues to travel in Libra and becomes inactive at 12:31 p.m. Mercury and the sun form 90-degree alignments to Saturn at 6:25 p.m. and 8:21 p.m. The sun and Mercury align at 7:17 p.m. All important signings, decisions are definitely off limits. The moon enters Scorpio at 9:51 p.m. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 13

Challenging planetary influences continue today and tomorrow. The moon travels in Scorpio, generating a serious mood. Others may be difficult to get along with, pensive, hypersensitive. Don't rock the boat in business or romance. Stay busy with work projects. You can get a lot accomplished. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Review your priorities and readjust your sights. Open your heart to higher visions.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14

Stormy astrological weather continues. A Scorpio moon urges you to focus on the positives instead of getting caught up in worries, limited thinking. Let go of the past and of situations you have no control over. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off. The Scorpio moon forms challenging alignments to Uranus, Mercury, Saturn. The moon becomes inactive at 10:23 p.m., when the last quarter phase occurs. Mars moves into Sagittarius at 3:06 p.m., remaining there until September 8. Mars will begin retrograde travel on May 11, when it reaches the last degree of Sagittarius.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15

Planetary action turns around completely today. Storm clouds move out; sunny and mild astrological weather returns. The moon enters optimistic Sagittarius at 5:02 a.m. However, a lunar opposition to Jupiter in the morning warns against acting impulsively, overdoing on any level. Retrograde Mercury aligns with Uranus at 21-degrees of Aquarius. This combination may bring unexpected news or shed new light on matters. Keep an open mind. You can find new solutions to old problems.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16

A Sagittarius moon continues to set the stage for an upbeat day. There are a couple of pitfalls, however. A lunar alignment to Pluto this morning may generate emotional fireworks. Think before you say or do something you will later regret. In addition, Mars prepares to oppose Jupiter, the planetary ruler of Sagittarius. Don't take chances or do anything risky. It is better to handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands mental focus and concentration. Gather with friends and let the good times roll this evening.

Explore the splendor of the winter landscape

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Perched in my window seat on a chilly, overcast day in early February, I gaze out at the snow-covered gardens and dream of spring. Another snowfall is predicted, as this winter season seems destined to linger indefinitely. While perpetual snow cover provides the ideal insulation blanket for our dormant plants, I long to see bare, soft earth and eagerly anticipate the opportunity to poke through leaf litter in search of emerging spring bulbs and perennials. Somehow I missed the results of that chubby, prognosticating rodent, Punxsutawney Phil, on Groundhog Day, but with the aid of modern technology, I was able to consult any number of web sites to confirm my suspicions that Chuck predicted that winter is likely to persist for many more weeks to come.

Despite the rather, gloomy weather outside, the winter landscape still serves as a source of inspiration and entertainment to the astute observer. Our dormant landscapes possess a beauty all their own with form, line and texture becoming the essential features. These elements form the basis for any successful garden design, and are often referred to as the "bones" of the landscape. This is the season to analyze these primary elements which serve as the foundation and structure of your garden and to note adjustments which should be made when warmer weather permits modification of these fundamental forms and lines.

Think of the winter landscape as a black and white photograph and imagine its components as sculptures. Each family of trees, for instance, has its own unique architecture. Dogwoods, cherries, magnolias, pears, crabapples, and weeping cultivars of birch, cherry, and katsura have extremely attractive silhouettes when "undressed." These elegant forms and distinctive lines tend to be disguised by lush foliage and vibrant colors with the coming of spring, summer and fall. It is rewarding to learn to recognize and appreciate each unique species without its foliage.

The winter landscape need not be all black and white, and for those of us who respond to color, thoughtful planting can dramatically enhance the winter palette. Fruit-bearing trees and shrubs add multi-seasonal color with the added bonus of attracting wildlife. By winter's end, many of these berries may be less dramatic or absent all together but holly, hawthorne, crabapple, pyrachantha, and juniper, to name a few, are worthy additions to any landscape.

Evergreens provide a dramatic contrast to the drab browns and grays of winter or a blanket of snow. Spruces, pines, hemlocks, firs, cedars, yews, junipers, and false cypress (Chamaecyparis spp.) are available in a wealth of sizes and color variations including blues, yellow, rusts and innumerable shades of green. When planted in small groups, evergreen trees and shrubs furnish blocks of color and form, even at a substantial distance, which can be used to frame views, create boundaries, or serve as backdrops for the handsome, white bark of birches or the branches of yellow- or red-twigged dogwoods.

Combinations of different colored evergreens including blues, yellows and copper interspersed with a diversity of greens, brighten the dormant landscape. Contrast of texture and color offers additional interest; repetition of these textures and colors produces rhythm by drawing your eye through the design. The smooth, shiny foliages of rhododendron, mountain laurel, holly, and leucothoe combined with the coarser textures of false cypress and arborvitae, or the fine needles of white pine and hemlock, create beauty in all seasons.

While our plants may lie dormant, many creatures remain active to provide gardeners with innumerable diversions and entertainment. Numerous bird species and small mammals can be observed foraging about the perennial borders and beneath the shrubbery in their quest for food. Dark-eyed juncos hop about as they jump to pluck seeds from the withered heads of asters and coneflowers protruding above the snow's icy crust. I mourn the departure of these plump, little, slate-colored snowbirds each spring when they fly northward to cooler climes.

Nearby, the brilliant rod plumage of a handsome cardinal is unmistakable as he cheerfully sings his springtime melody from the branches of a heavily budded dogwood. Tufted titmice and chick-a-deer flit back and forth to my window feeder, their perky, irresistible dispositions always producing a smile and lifting my spirits regardless of the weather. Equally endearing is the feisty Carolina wren with its distinctive white eyebrow and cocked tail feathers, exuberant song and persistent scolding of intruders.

Squirrels, bunnies and other furry visitors may not always be welcome as they raid my birdfeeders or munch on my plants and shrubs, but their presence seems more tolerable at this time of year. The crazy acrobatics of squirrels are undeniably entertaining, albeit, infuriating, and it is difficult, to detest a cuddly bunny in search of sustenance. Perhaps it is easier to endure their intrusion at this time of year because they can be ready observed. During the warmer months, their destructive tendencies always seems to be perpetrated under the cover of darkness.

The dormant winter landscape can be truly beautiful and entertaining. Take a few moments this week to observe and explore the splendor of our winter wonderland.

New Releases

THE WEDDING PLANNER (PG-13) The title character (Jennifer Lopez) somehow, despite her beauty, can't find true love, but when she meets a handsome doctor (Matthew McConaughey) she falls. He, however, is engaged, to one of our heroine's clients! Oh what to do? Some cute stuff mired in sugar overdose, with an ambling plot line, a flat screenplay and some embarrassing lapses. (D.B.) C

Ongoing

BEFORE NIGHT FALLS (R) An interpretation of Cuban writer Reinaldo Arenas (Javier Bardem, in a superb performance), persecuted for his homosexuality and books in Castro's people's paradise, from childhood to his liberation, albeit not a happy one, in New York. With Sean Penn and Johnny Depp in small parts, and Olivier Martinez as his companion. (D.B.) B

CAST AWAY (PG-13) Tom Hanks triumphs as a FedEx executive whose plane crashes, landing him on a Fiji island, all alone, for a long time, though his native intelligence and a bunch of washed-ashore FedEx packages enable him to survive. Will he live to reunite with his sweetie (Helen Hunt)? A bravura performance in a gutsy, sober film. (D.B.) A-

CHOCOLAT (PG) A lovely drifter) Juliette Binoche) blows into a French provincial town in the late 1950s, with her daughter and recipes for sensually arousing chocolates. She tames a grouchy crone (Judi Dench), meets an Irish vagabond (Johnny Depp), rescues an abused woman (Lena Olin), but angers the town boss (Alfred Molina). Sugary, retro, sweet. (D.B.) B-

CROUCHING TIGER, HIDDEN DRAGON (PG-13) Even with the charmless Chow Yun Fat, this majestically photographed film, featuring stupendous martial arts feats (plus some wonderful special effects) excels. Michelle Yeoh, Zhang Ziyi and Change Chen co-star, in a tale of old China, a valuable, honored sword, love and vengeance. Remarkable. (D.B.) A-

THE FAMILY MAN (PG-13) When wealthy, single, popular, but empty-hearted New Yorker Nicolas Cage wakes up one morning to find that everything has changed — he's now married, with kids, living in the burbs — he freaks. But he somehow adjusts to working in a tire store instead of a sleek Manhattan office building. And he begins to think that maybe married life with Tea Leoni is pretty darn good. A sweet story with a good supply of laughs. (E.S.) B

FINDING FORRESTER (PG-13) A bright black boy (Rob Brown) is given a prep school scholarship (in part — of course; this is a movie, after all — to play basketball), and he encounters a reclusive, brilliant one-book writer (Sean Connery), who mentors him. The cliches pile up faster than chads in Florida, but the acting is persuasive. (D.B.) B-

THE GIFT (R) A young widow (Cate Blanchett) has psychic powers and encounters the ire of the local psychotic thug (Keanu Reeves), helps the local troubled lad (Giovanni Ribisi), tries to aid others in need (among them Hillary Swank) and is brought in to help figure out who murdered the local honey (Katie Holmes). Fine acting, in a film that sometimes goes over the top. (D.B.) B-

MALENA (R) An Italian 13-year-old (Giuseppe Sulfaro) in 1941 gets a yen for the town widow (Monica Bellucci), who is gorgeous and unimpressed by the town's conservatism. The war brings terrible changes to her life, as he grows and sees life as it is. Humorous and poignant, in turns, successfully portraying an era and the process of maturation. (D.B.) B

O BROTHER, WHERE ART THOU? (PG-13) The Coen brothers' latest, with George Clooney, John Turturro and Tim Blake Nelson as Depression-era escaped criminals eluding cops, con men (John Goodman), Baby-Face Nelson (Michael Badalucco), and encountering Mississippi Governor Pappy O'Daniel (Charles Durning) and Ku Klux Klansmen. Too precious for words and a bit heavy-handed, but amusing and harmless. (D.B.) B-

THE PLEDGE (R) Sean Penn's third directorial venture is a stunning portrait of a just retired cop (Jack Nicholson, superb), hell-bent on finding the killer of a small girl. With Robin Wright Penn, as a battered mother, and several fine performers in cameos, the movie, though over-long and awkwardly ended, enhances ambience, characterization and a propelling story line. (D.B.) A-

QUILLS (R) The last days of the Marquis de Sade (Geoffrey Rush) in an asylum, given a bluntly grotesque film treatment. With Kate Winslet as a naïve servant, Joaquin Phoenix as a tormented priest and Michael Caine as a sadistic doctor, the cast does what can be done with an over-the-top tale. The fundamental question — how may art best be served? — is asked; its answer comes midst sometimes unspeakable vignettes. (D.B.) B

SAVE THE LAST DANCE (PG-13) A suburban white girl (Julia Stiles), transferred to a Chicago inner city school, finds rhythm and a new will to dance owing to a new black friend (Sean Patrick Thomas). The ambience of a nearly all-black school is well presented, though the characterizations repeatedly veer toward caricature. A pleasant fantasy of interracial romance wedded to a melodrama. (D.B.) C+

Julia Stiles and Sean Patrick Thomas talk between dances in "Save the Last Dance."

SHADOW OF THE VAMPIRE (R) A semi-fantasy about what F.W. Murnau went through creating "Nosferatu," his vampire classic. With John Malkovich as the director and Willem Dafoe as Max Schreck, the title character, the movie is atmosphere-heavy and goes intriguingly bonkers suggesting that Schreck was not an actor but a real life (so to speak) vampire. An oddity but at times a chillingly engaging one. (D.B.) B+

SNATCH (R) Writer-director Guy Ritchie's follow-up to "Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels" has many similar plot structures as it predecessor. But this tale, about diamond thieves and bookies, not drug dealers and card sharks, is both darker and funnier and wilder. Brad Pitt speaks unintelligibly, big Vinnie Jones ("Lock, Stock") is inspiringly fearsome, the violence is plentiful but not gross, a dog steals away every scene he's in. (E.S.) B+

Dennis Farina looks at a gem of a gem in "Snatch."

STATE AND MAIN (R) A movie company begins filming in a small Vermont town. The director (William H. Macy) suffers a temperamental female lead (Sarah Jessica Parker), a male lead (Alec Baldwin) with a taste for 14-year-old girls, a wistful writer (Philip Seymour Hoffman) and assorted politicians with varying agendas. Madcap and at times hilarious. (D.B.) B

THIRTEEN DAYS (PG-13) The Cuban missile crisis, in October of 1962, seen from the White House, with Kenny O'Donnell (Kevin Costner, sporting an awful Boston accent), shown as more important than he was. Bruce Greenwood excels as JFK, with Steven Culp as Bobby, absent the viciousness, everyone glum and determined. The historical outlines ring true in a powerful, adult drama. (D.B.) B+

Cohasset wonders where Greenbush mitigation stands

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Much like the old adage about New England weather, if you don't like the status of the town's mitigation talks with the MBTA, just wait a minute.

In a 72-hour span, train talks involved information, negotiation, ultimatum, agitation and contradiction.

Going into last night's selectmen's meeting, where the board was scheduled to discuss the proposed Greenbush mitigation deal, it was uncertain exactly where the town stood with the MBTA. All that was certain was that the board would have a lot of talk about.

Last Wednesday, a day after meeting with abutters, Senior Project Coordinator Kevin Dasey stunned the town by imposing a Feb. 21 deadline to sign the deal or face losing part of its mitigation package. He followed up the ultimatum telling a crowd in Weymouth on Thursday that the MBTA was no longer considering a cut and cover tunnel through Weymouth Landing. However, 30 minutes later, Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan directly refuted that claim. The next day, the MBTA announced Dasey had resigned, but insisted it had nothing to do with what had just happened.

"I think he was really a breath of fresh air. I think the progress this town has made is to a great extent because of him."
— Thomas Gruber, mitigation committee chairman

John Carlisle, the spokesman for the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction, which oversees the Greenbush talks and answers to Secretary Sullivan's office, had said on Thursday that the EOTC had authorized the deadline because it wanted to see some closure.

But on Monday, Carlisle said the office didn't know Dasey was going to give Cohasset and ultimatum, and "don't know why he did."

According to Carlisle, Dasey had sent in his letter of resignation two Schools, selectmen spar over building cleanliness

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

What started out as a routine budget presentation between the School Committee and selectmen Tuesday dissolved into a heated discussion over the cleanliness of the town's schools with fingers being pointed back and forth across the table.

Apparently triggering the debate were results from a recent walk-through of the town's schools at which health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik reported a number of health and cleanliness concerns such as dirty tables in the cafeteria, low water pressure in bubblers, and broken toilets, leaking urinals, soap-less dispensers and poor ventilation in school bathrooms. Although the three memoranda – one for each school – were not referenced in the discussion, copies were included in this week's selectmen's correspondence.

"We have a $10 million school budget and we can't keep the schools clean. I think we need to look at what we're spending money on."
— Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan

"While the restrooms were not necessarily dirty, better cleaning by custodial staff is in order," Godzik said about the middle-high school.

In the Osgood report, Godzik said there was not enough water pressure in the bubblers to produce a water stream above the guard.

"These should be adjusted to eliminate the present likelihood of children's mouths touching the guard," he stated. "This is an excellent vehicle for the spread of acute upper respiratory infections as well as gastroenteritis."

The tenor of the joint meeting changed after a presentation of the proposed $10.175 million school budget for fiscal year 2002, when Selectman Ronnie McMorris chastised the School Committee for not outsourcing evening custodial duties.

She said in exchange for the town voting to build a new Osgood School, renovate the Deer Hill and middle/high school, and to transfer maintenance duties from the schools

Cohasset Mariner wins top honors

Takes home three awards

For the third straight year editor Mary Ford and the Cohasset Mariner editorial team were nominated in the General Excellence category by the New England Press Association. Again this year, the paper took First Place, as it did two years ago.

The judges said, "Great stories, photos, layout, and everything else anyone would want in a paper."

Ford's editorial team consists of staff reporter Rick Collins, photographers Alan Chapman and Susan Haney, and graphic designer Cheryl O'Brien.

Community Newspaper Company/South that includes the Cohasset Mariner took home 20 awards, six of them for first place, at the annual New England Press Association awards banquet held Saturday at the Park Plaza Hotel in Boston.

The Cohasset Mariner also won second place in the Social Issues Feature Story category for a multi-article package on drug problems on the South Shore written by Chris Szechenyi, Seth Jacobson and Jeanne Rideout.

Judges also recognized the Cohasset Mariner's local election coverage with a third-place award. "Excellent stories, presentation of the candidates and information regarding election results," the judges wrote. "Question of the Week keeps the interest."

The awards were presented for excellence in reporting, writing, design and photography.

"This is a real tribute to the hard work of our local journalists," said Mark Skala, editor in chief for CNC/South. "We are fortunate to cover some unique and dynamic communities and the awards are an acknowledgement of the work of so many people. As one judge noted in comments "(the entry) shows the power of team work in a new way.' I couldn't agree more."

Competition was at an all-time record this year, with more than

Chimney fire forces Red Lion evacuation

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A cold day and a big fire in an improperly lined fireplace combined to force 150 Red Lion Inn patrons to leave the restaurant's Sunday brunch when a fire broke out behind the fireplace.

According to Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, "a piece of construction" behind the restaurant's main fireplace and chimney caught fire Sunday and burned for a while until firefighters were able to break through the wall and locate the fire.

The fire department was called shortly before 2 p.m. when the first and second floors filled with a light smoke.

"I was told by some staff that happens when the main fire place was used," Lincoln said. He said the restaurant usually opens up windows to help with the ventilation of the smoke. However when that failed to air out the building, Lincoln said he knew it was "something more serious" and ordered the restaurant evacuated.

Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide said about 150 people were in the restaurant at the time, and most left happy despite the fire. "They were just finishing dessert so they were able to get away without paying," he joked.

Michael Spellman, the Mariner's sports editor, was near

Icing causes slippery situation

Money sought for Highland Avenue catch basin

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Roger Hill hopes next winter he won't be sliding through the Highland Avenue and Robert Jason Road intersection. The Highland Avenue resident is one of 10 residents that have signed a citizen's petition for Town Meeting asking the town to appropriate $4,500 to construct a catch basin on the sloped street, so that its perennial ice problem can be resolved.

Highland Avenue goes up the granite ledge adjacent to the Town Common, and past St. Stephen's and because of its impermeable ground, any water from the hill area, runs down the street and into the intersection, icing up in the winter.

"There's a catch basin on the down-hill side, but the water comes down the hill and crosses the street and then into the catch basin," said Hill. "The end of the street is covered in ice. I've slid out into the intersection too many times."

"The end of the street is covered in ice. I've slid out into the intersection too many times."
— Roger Hill, 19A Highland Ave.

The street, which was torn up in the past year to install sewer pipes and new water lines, remains without a final paving job, which has made the problem worse.

"The whole street is a sheet of ice," Hill said.

Adding to the problem, says Building Commissioner Robert Egan, is that the run-off is finding its way into a Highland Avenue resident's basement. "She has no choice but to pump it out," he said.

"[Freezing on Highland Avenue] has been a problem for years," Egan continued. "In the 21st century we should be able to pop in a catch basin every now and then."

Hill also said the ice problem hinders the ability of the town Department of Public Works trucks to climb the road and plow.

Egan said one of the contractors involved with the sewer project was asked to provide a price to install the catch basin, however called the figurre, "way out of line. It was too much to even consider."

DPW Superintendent Harold Litchfield said it would cost $4,500 for the town to do the work.

The annual Town Meeting will be held March 31, at 10 a.m., at the Cohasset Middle/High School Sullivan Gymnasium.

COPS grant

Selectmen voted unanimously Tuesday night to accept the federal COPS grant that will give the town $75,000 over the next three years to partially fund the hiring of a new police officer.

The hiring, which will take place over the next few months, will bring the number of officers in town to 18. The grant covers 75 percent of the officer's first-year salary, leaving $18,000 for the town to cover.

As a result, Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen that he had put off the purchase of a new police cruiser until a special fall Town Meeting, freeing up money for the town to cover the new hire. Each year the town budgets for two new cruisers at a cost of $26,000 a piece.

Osgood arts grant

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) and Debra Kennedy, chairman of the Cohasset Cultural Council, announced a grant of $250 has been awarded to the James Osgood School by the Massachusetts Cultural Council. The grant is part of the council's Event and Residency Program, which support short- and long-term residencies of artists in schools.

The grant will provide for a performance of songs and personal stories about immigration throughout history by Promised Land for second- and third-grade students.

"This grant enables children and teachers to participate in creative, hands-on learning situations with artists who have years of experience in school settings," Hedlund said. These dollars are critical to schools that are working to meet education reform requirements, and that understand the importance of arts in the curriculum."

The Massachusetts Cultural Council has awarded 133 Event & Residency grants totaling $212,312 across the state for projects to occur during spring, 2001.

Hedlund said the Education Reform Act of 1993 includes the arts as one of seven core subjects for Massachusetts schools. The Board of Education has approved an Arts Curriculum Framework providing school districts with guidance on how to integrate the arts into the classroom and the Event and Residency Program offers an important resource.

Playground positions

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting applications for playground program counselor positions for their seven-week summer program for children ages 31/2 through 12. Applicants must be at least 18 years of age with demonstrated experience working with children in camp, sports or organizational environments.

Those interested in working with children in the day camp structured program, call the Recreation Department office at (781) 383-4109 for further information and an application form or fax your résumé to (781) 383-1561.

Summer jobs

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund announced that this year's recruitment program for summer positions within the Department of Environmental Management and the Metropolitan District Commission is underway.

Anyone interested in applying for these seasonal positions should contact Sandra Dalton at the District office located at 66 Sea St., North Weymouth, MA 02191. (781) 340-9866 to obtain a referral form.

The seasonal positions that are available include lifeguards, clerks, summer workers and laborers for MDC and DEM swimming pools, campgrounds and picnic/swimming areas.

To ensure that these facilities are staffed and seasonal personnel are adequately trained, completed forms must be received before Friday, March 30.

Hedlund hours

The February office hours for state Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) will be held at the Cohasset Town Hall Thursday, Feb. 15, from noon to 1 p.m. in the 2A vestibule.

Hedlund also maintains a district office at 66 Sea St., North Weymouth, that is accessible Monday through Friday for constituents and appointments with the senator. The telephone number is (781) 340-9866.

Chimney fire forces Red Lion evacuation

the scene at the time of the fire and saw white smoke "pouring pretty heavily out of the upper story window."

Ordelheide told Spellman, "We were lucky to catch it in time, it could have been a lot worse." Ordelheide described the fire department's response as "great."

Lincoln said he had the hoses on stand-by, and once the location of the fire was discovered, it was quickly put out. Fire apparatus from Hull and Scituate were also called to the scene to help out.

The Red Lion Inn is in the final stages of a $6 million renovation and expansion. The fireplace in the main dining room of the nearly 300-year old building is hundreds of years old, said Ordelheide. During the renovations, all the fireplaces were relined, but "apparently it wasn't done properly," he said.

Town Building Inspector Robert Egan said the only damage to the building was to the areas cut out to reach the fire. He said because of the faulty lining job, the fire was "going to happen sometime."

The restaurant and hotel were closed Monday, but were scheduled to be open by Valentine's Day.

Selectmen updated on town history book

'Living' website is possible

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Town History Committee, in the midst of writing the third volume of town history, appeared before selectmen last week to update the board on its progress, and propose a new town history website.

Committee chairman Wigmore Pierson, and members Jackie Dormitzer, Lou Harvey, Julia Gleason and Louis Eaton, told the board that the next volume, being penned by Dormitzer, should be ready in the summer of 2002.

Dormitzer said she has almost finished the 1980's and should begin work on the 1990's this fall. She also is looking for old photographs of the town taken in the last 50 years that "say something about Cohasset."

The book, which will be available to the public upon completion, was also supposed to be made available on CD-ROM for computers. However Harvey warned the board that the CD's could prove to be obsolete 10 years down the road, much like 5-1/2 inch floppy disks are now.

Instead, Harvey suggested the town sponsor an official town history website. He said the website would be a "living, breathing" document that could be periodically updated and edited. However, because it is a "living, breathing" thing, the town would have to commit money annually for its upkeep. Harvey told the board it would probably be a minimum of $300 to keep the page online and updated. The committee has already reserved the webpage name www.cohasset history.com

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan and Selectman Merle Brown suggested high school technology classes could be utilized to maintain the site. Callahan said he recently visited a small town in Pennsylvania's website that was maintained by high school students and called it "elaborate."

The board is looking into forming a committee to further investigate the idea.

At the start of the meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad reminded the committee and Pierson that the meeting room has a new camera system, including one behind the selectmen that look out into the audience.

"Have you ever been on camera before, Wig?" Haddad asked Pierson, the former host of the cable television talk show "Pierson to Person" that ran on local cable-TV for ten years.

"He has more time on TV than anyone else in the room," joked Eaton.

Water resources public meeting

The Hingham Water Resources Task Force will hold a public meeting Wednesday, Feb. 28, at 7:30 p.m. at town hall.

At that time, GZA, a preeminent environmental consulting firm, will present its executive summary of the Weir River watershed, and Samantha Woods of the Weir River Watershed Association will also make a presentation.

The water resources task force will present its conclusions and recommendations as well.

A key concern is whether or not the water supply is adequate to meet the demands of the next decade as well as those posed by new developments.

A key concern is whether or not the water supply is adequate to meet the demands of the next decade as well as those posed by new developments.

The towns of Hull, Norwell and Cohasset have also been invited to attend.

Volunteers wanted to assist CMHS prepare for evaluation

Cohasset Middle High School is looking for parent and community volunteers to assist teachers, administrators, support staff, and students prepare for the formal evaluation process it will go through in the fall of 2002.

The New England Association of Schools and Colleges requires its member schools to undergo a self-study and formal evaluation at least once every ten years to receive accreditation. Accordingly, the Cohasset School Committee has set aside some time for the professional staff to begin and complete this work. Students in grades 7-12 will be dismissed early (11:20 a.m.) on the following days: Feb. 8, March 13 and April 11. There will be no school - all day - for students (K-12) on May 7 while the professional staff continues its work. In addition, there will be approximately 10 dates during the 2001-2002 school year when students again will be dismissed early so that the staff can continue this work.

Parents and community members who are interested in assisting with this self-study process and are available to serve on one of several subcommittees (such as Curriculum, Instruction, Leadership and Organization, Community Resources, etc.) on the dates and times mentioned above, should please contact the high school (383-6107) and leave your name at your earliest convenience. Mrs. Marie Schleiff and Dr. Michael Gill, co-chairs of the Steering Committee, will coordinate the committee assignments.

Schools approve $10.1M budget, find extra $180K

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Last Thursday was a good day for the Cohasset Public School system.

Not only did the school committee approve a $10.175 million fiscal year 2002 budget, that will create five new teacher positions, increase music and art instruction, and bring back the varsity softball program — but it also announced it was able to reallocate $180,000 from this year's budget.

Budget approval came as no surprise to those in attendance, but the announcement that the committee had been given the green light to reallocate $180,000 in this year's budget did.

By the way of background, school officials announced last month that though the fiscal year 2002 budget number would increase $600,000 over the fiscal year 2001 number — the schools would also be able to reallocate an additional $180,000 that had been built into the budget for maintenance next year. The town Department of Public Works took over maintenance at the schools last summer, originally with the thought the school department would transfer its maintenance line item to the DPW budget. However, because the DPW had enough money to fund the maintenance, Town Manager Mark Haddad said the schools would be allowed to keep the money in the budget and could reallocate it to other areas.

"We've been under-funded for years and could really use this."

— Mark DeGiacomo, school committee

As it turns out, said school committee member Mark DeGiacomo, the schools have that same $180,000 maintenance line item in this year's budget and it had gone unused. The school department asked Haddad if it would be allowed to reallocate the money to other areas this year.

"We've been under-funded for years and could really use this," DeGiacomo said he told Haddad.

"And he kindly said 'yes'," added committee member Stephanie Noble.

As a result, Supt. Edward Malvey announced a spending plan for the majority of the money. Because long-time secretary Debbie Greenwood is retiring this summer, Malvey hopes to bring a replacement on board early to ease the transition, at a cost of $7,700. He also looked to spend $9,300 on further curriculum development for the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools.

But perhaps most importantly, he said the town's three schools would be given nearly $90,000 to purchase supplies and new books.

Noble praised the decision to put such a large amount of money into supplies. "I hear there's a rumor of new spelling books," she said half-jokingly.

"We're really going to be in good shape," DeGiacomo said. He said schools sometimes have to have parents buy and send in supplies such as paper, and that "a school system like this shouldn't have to stoop to these solutions."

Also included in the spending plan was to send $50,000 back to the town.

Committee Chairman Pat Martin, Noble and DeGiacomo all thought sending the money back would be a "good-faith move" thanking the town for its support. Noble said "Haddad has been so generous it's time we reciprocate."

Haddad appreciated the kind words, but said, unfortunately it wasn't him just being nice, the $180,000 was given to the schools by the town to spend, thus it's rightfully theirs to do what they want. "I have no control over the school committee," he said. "Town Meeting gave them the right to spend that money."

As for the fiscal year 2002 budget, Malvey said by starting budget discussions in November, instead of at the beginning of the calendar year, the "process worked very well."

Malvey broke the budget down to the committee and those in attendance using a slew of charts and graphs. He said 81 percent of the $10.175 million budget goes to pay for salaries, and 23 percent of the total budget goes to fund special education.

DeGiacomo said the new budget reflects the fact that 50 new students have entered the system over the past two years, and that this was the first budget that "accounted for the growth."

He added, "There has really been a cooperative effort with the town manager and the school committee. [The budget increase of] $600,000 is a number we agreed to, that let us put in what we thought was necessary."

Selectmen spar over school cleanliness to the town Department of Public Works — the schools promised they would hire a cleaning service.

"You said you would go from custodians to a cleaning service. This year money isn't an issue. Why aren't you putting [the cleaning duties] out to a service?" she asked.

The school department is being allowed to keep the $180,000 that had been earmarked for maintenance in both this year's and next year's budgets, and reallocate it throughout the school budget. (see related story) McMorris suggested that some of the $180,000 should have been applied to the hiring of a cleaning service.

Both school committee chairman Pat Martin and selectman Merle Brown explained that the school department had decided to outsource cleaning at the new Osgood School first, gauge how that process goes, and then do the same for the other two schools.

Martin said the schools never promised to switch to a cleaning service, but to improve the upkeep of the buildings. Last year Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey put the cleaning contract out for bid, but the cheapest bid came back at $50,000 higher than had been budgeted. The schools decided to start at the two-year old Osgood, and then phase in the cleaning service for the other schools. The school department has budgeted for an additional part-time custodian at the middle/high school, and $26,000 for cleaning services next year.

"We are still at the point where we are dealing with the issues," Martin said.

Brown said he agreed with the school committee to not rush into fully outsourcing the custodial duties. "It's like a baby. At the start you don't walk, you crawl," he said. "You start at the Osgood and find out what the issues are."

McMorris wasn't satisfied and said she believes the schools are putting students health "at risk" by not improving the quality of the cleaning.

But Malvey quickly defended the condition of the schools.

"We need to stop this hysteria [that the schools are dirty]," he said. "I've had one person complain to me, and everything else has been heard second and third person."

He added that he has authorized overtime and hired a cleaning service to come into the schools over February and April vacations. Malvey also said tight school budget's over the past two years, including in 1999 when only the smallest of three override ballot questions passed, has helped contribute to the lack of proper custodial staff. "We need the town to be patient and give us what we need," he said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the school department "keeps coming up with excuses" and that he doesn't care who cleans the schools as long as it gets done.

Selectman Chairman Thomas Callahan criticized Malvey for saying it was the town's fault for not passing a larger override in 1999.

Malvey then accused both Callahan and McMorris of using the issue for "political grandstanding," and said, "We have a plan. You should trust us and give us a few months. I have nothing else to say."

Callahan, who is up for reelection this year, and McMorris both vociferously objected to the grandstanding charge. Callahan said "We have a $10.5 million school budget and we can't keep the schools clean. I think we need to look at what we're spending money on."

He specifically questioned the need for a full-time school department business manager, which is part of the proposed school budget.

School committee member Stephanie Noble told the board that the school departments of Dover-Sherborne, East Longmeadow, Harvard, Scituate and Nantucket — chosen because of the similar socio-economic make-up and population as Cohasset — all have full-time business managers.

Sullivan said a full-time business manager would improve the efficiency of the school department.

Malvey said a 1997 audit of the department recommended a full-time business manager.

The acrimonious discussion came to an end after 45 minutes. Selectmen aren't able to veto or approve any part of the school budget. The budget will be approved as part of the general town operating budget at the annual Town Meeting on March 31.

Little effect on value of houses that abut rail line

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A quick survey of other towns affected by the recent restoration of the Old Colony commuter rail line revealed that properties, which directly abut the right-of-way, have seen just a 10 percent reduction in their assessed value, and in some cases, no change in value at all.

Deputy Assessor Cheryl Pooler called the Board of Assessors of Kingston, Abington, Plympton, Halifax and Whitman — all towns that are along the Plymouth branch of the Old Colony line. What she found out was that only two of the towns had felt the need to adjust property assessments — Kingston and Plympton.

"The consensus of the assessors was that they felt they wanted to show there could be an effect [on property assessments along the right-of-way] so they made a slight adjustment," Pooler said. "But after the train was up and running, they really didn't see any difference."

In fact in Abington, town assessors had originally reduced abutters property assessments by 10 percent but the state Department of Revenue made the board reverse the adjustment because sales hadn't shown it necessary.

"The consensus of the assessors was that they felt they wanted to show there could be an effect so they made a slight adjustment. But after the train was up and running, they really didn't see any difference."

— Cheryl Pooler, Cohasset deputy assessor

One property in Halifax was adjusted because the train station encroached on the property, and Whitman made no changes at all. Kingston's adjustment was "on average" 10 percent, said that town's assessor, Jim Judge. In Plympton, only commercial properties received a 10 percent abatement, with 5 percent adjustments given to houses within 100 feet.

Abutter concerns about a decrease in property values if the Greenbush commuter rail does become a reality, sparked Cohasset selectmen to ask Pooler to conduct the survey.

Property owners can seek abatements if they feel their house has been overvalued. A property's assessed value is what its property taxes are based on. A property's assessed value does not increase if it is sold at a higher price. Property value only changes during a revaluation year when the entire town is reassessed.

Pooler acknowledged the housing markets in the towns surveyed doesn't compare with the Cohasset market, but said nonetheless, there doesn't appear to be signs of "plummeting" property values. She said in fact the opposite was happening and most towns had experienced an increase in housing demand. There was no evidence that the housing boom didn't also extend to abutting houses.

She said though the results come from a "little quick survey," it is available for residents to look at. She also welcomes any questions residents, especially abutters, may have.

Confusion comes amid Dasey departure from T weeks ago and had planned for Friday, Feb. 9 to be his last day.

As of Monday, the state's official stance on the ultimatum was that Cohasset would not be held to the deadline.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said Sullivan did not back the deadline in Cohasset.

"He said the town is not under that deadline, and that he would like to get a deal done," Hedlund said. Interestingly, Hedlund reported last Thursday that Sullivan told him the deadline doesn't mean all mitigation items will come off the list, just that "there will be no guarantee they will stay" — meaning Cohasset would be held to some sort of deadline.

MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo reiterated that the "21st is not a hard and fast deadline. We will continue to work with the town to get this done. At this point, everything remains on the table. We have no plans to remove anything in no agreement is reached."

All of this leaves Cohasset wondering where it goes next.

Until last week's events, elected officials had praised the recent change in attitude the MBTA had shown in dealing with towns along the Greenbush corridor. Cohasset and Scituate selectmen met with Cellucci to discuss the lack of progress and good-faith negotiations last September. A push was made after that meeting to get mitigation deals finalized, and Cohasset selectmen announced in December they were close to signing an agreement.

Last Wednesday's meeting was to discuss a list of concerns selectmen had compiled at a public Jan. 30 and after the abutter meeting the day before. Eighty-five minutes into the scheduled 90-minute meeting, Dasey stunned selectmen and everyone else in the room not connected to the MBTA, that the board had until this past Tuesday to sign the deal, or, he couldn't guarantee "what was on the table would be there."

"The EOTC feels we need to come to some sort of closure," Dasey said.

After much protest, Dasey agreed to a Feb. 21 deadline.

Residents at the meeting slammed Dasey and the MBTA saying they should be "ashamed" and called it a return to the "arrogant" MBTA of years past.

Despite what the EOTC says, at least two people in town think Dasey was told to give the ultimatum, and that the state just backed off once they saw the reaction.

"Kevin was a very good guy at carrying out orders, and I think he said what was expected of him," said Mitigation Committee Chairman Thomas Gruber, who wondered if Dasey was just the fall guy.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said, "My own view is that I doubt he would say it unless he was told to."

The resignation was also met with great disappointment among those involved, who considered Dasey to be largely responsible for moving along the discussions.

"I think he was really a breath of fresh air," said Gruber. "I think the progress this town has made is to a great extent because of him.

"He sat on our side of the table in Braintree (where he was that town's mitigation committee chairman before joining the MBTA), so he knew what the things were all about. Nobody else at the MBTA had that experience."

Callahan said Dasey had put "a much nicer face on the MBTA over the last two years."

Martha Gjesteby, a long-time member of the Greenbush Citizens Advisory Committee — in charge of critiquing the MBTA's environmental impact report — called Dasey a "natural mediator," who could see both sides of the coin.

"He has very nice to deal with, and as honest as the day is long," she said. "It's a real loss."

According to Pesaturo, Eric Botterman, the MBTA's chief of engineering and construction, would be the new point-person for the MBTA.

Town to apply for $1 million grant for help with train mitigation

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Greenbush commuter train may not be on track yet, but Cohasset hopes the money will start rolling in once the MBTA-backed $1 million Public Works Economic Development grant is submitted.

The grant is part of the $3.5 million-plus mitigation package currently awaiting signatures from Cohasset selectmen, and would be used to aesthetically improve the grade crossings and other areas affected by restoration of the Old Colony Rail line.

Though actual construction of the commuter line is still years away, selectmen voted last week to beat the rush and send in the application this week.

Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington, who presented the application along with David Walsh of Boston-based landscape architects, Copley/Wolff, told selectman that the beauty of the grant is the wide-range of things it could be used for. Unlike most other state-grants, Harrington said the application doesn't have to specifically outline what the town would use the grant for, just as long as it was tied into a public works project.

Harrington said the town would focus the grant money mainly on street and landscape improvements along Depot Court, the town parking lot and Pleasant Street, and also to "tie in" the proposed grade crossings to the areas the tracks bisect. According to the proposed mitigation agreement, the MBTA would "reconstruct and expand" the existing town parking lot. Since the town parking lot now partially sits on the former Greenbush right-of-way, the MBTA is on the hook to replace the spaces lost.

Harrington and Town Manager Mark Haddad said the money could be used to further enhance whatever work the MBTA does.

But some selectmen don't think the town should spend a cent on the reconstruction of the parking lot. Selectmen Merle Brown and Chairman Thomas Callahan said the MBTA should be responsible to make the parking lot look as good as possible.

"Why should we take the PWED grant to do what the MBTA should do right the first time?" asked Brown. Brown isn't against the grant, but said he just wants to make sure the MBTA doesn't "just hot top the parking lot and walk away."

Callahan said the board should do all it can to make sure the MBTA reconstructs the town parking lot to its liking. "None of this money should be spent on the footprint of the parking lot," he said. "If we can get these things, we can use this for other things."

Because the MBTA isn't even at the 30 percent designed phase, Cohasset doesn't know what the reconstructed parking lot will look like. Walsh said the town should try to "pound every dime out of the MBTA" they can, and suggested a streetscape plan around the area that includes trees, benches, drinking fountains, street lighting and perhaps a clock.

Haddad said the PWED grant would "further enhance" what the MBTA does in the area, and reminded the board that "the MBTA is not going to do everything we want them to do."

"Well, why not?" Brown wanted to know.

Walsh said the MBTA won't blend the grade crossings to the parking lot or to Main Street, but that the grant can be used to make additional improvements.

Haddad pointed out that the town also has streetscape improvement proposals coming in from the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, and will have to dig up the parking lot to do the last phase of the James Brook flood control project. He suggested coordinating all the projects to be done at the same time.

"We can leave the application somewhat open-ended," he said.

The application, said Haddad, will be a "true test of the MBTA's commitment to the Cohasset mitigation agreement. PWED grants, Haddad and Harrington said, are very competitive grants that can take years to get approved. Supposedly, with the MBTA's backing, the application could be approved within six months. The money won't be immediately sent to the town, but just held aside until the town begins the actual construction process.

Local students shine at Thayer Academy

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HELLO COHASSET

Hello Cohasset! As I sit here and write this weeks column, it is sunny, warmer and breezy making me wonder about the groundhog's predictions. Even me, who loves the snow and winter, cannot wait for spring and summer to arrive. I guess we shall just have to wait and see..

THAYER HONORS

Thayer Academy, in Braintree, sent news of some Cohasset students who made the Term 1 Academic Honors. Brooke Kristen Baker, Lauren Margaret Smith and Michael Thomas Ernst, all earned honors for the first term. Great work to all three of you. Also, Thayer announced the Semester 1 Academic Honors. Brooke, Lauren and Michael, as well as Malcolm J. Stansell all earned honors for this semester. Congratulations to all.

BC HIGH NEWS

Christopher J. Carr of Cohasset, a junior at Boston College High School, was one of 80 seniors and juniors inducted into the National Honor Society at a ceremony at Boston College High School's McNeice Pavilion. The National Honor Society is established under the National Association of Secondary School Principals to provide recognition to high school students who have clearly distinguished themselves in their school and community for scholarship, character, leadership and service.

SENIOR EVENTS

The Cohasset Elder Affairs has some upcoming events that sound like a great time. The Annual Valentine Event is being held on Friday, Feb 16 at 1 p.m.. Wonderful goodies by Anna Abbruzzese and music by Mabel Biagini will help to make this a wonderful and happy event. On Friday, Feb 23 from 10 a.m.-noon is the next Keep Well and Stay Well program being held at the Harborview Senior Housing. Don't forget the Medical Transportation available to you. A handicap van is available for trips of 15-mile radius, if needed, call Carol Barrett at 383-9112 Medical transportation is available for doctor, hospital and clinic morning appointments on Tuesdays and Thursdays by calling 383-0220 Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m.-2 p.m.. Make sure to mark Wednesday, March 21 to join the senior center at the Bayside Expo Center for this year's flower show. The cost is $17 and includes the trip in and out of Boston.

PRESIDENT'S LIST

Matthew Keefe, a student at Plymouth State College in Plymouth, N.H. was named to the President's List for achieving a grade point average of 3.7 or better during the Fall 2000-2001 academic year. Fantastic job, Matthew!

DEAN'S LIST

Wow, we have a lot of news from schools and colleges this week, a great tribute to all of our talented students. Colby College of Waterville, Maine, wanted us to know that Jessie L. Zerendow was named to the Dean's List for the Fall semester. Jessie is the daughter of Donald and Victoria Zerendow. Great work Jessie!

The fall semester Dean's List at Bryant College includes two Cohasset students. Todd M. Bestick, a sophomore finance major and Lauren N. Dooley, a junior management major were both named to the list. Keep up the great work.

BUTMANS SEND NEWS

I received a note from Bruce and Georgine Butman. They are doing well and wanted to say hello to everyone. Amelia made the high honors at her school which earned her a $100 savings bond from the school. High praise was sent to her teachers here in Cohasset.

Amelia is also working on her Silver Award in Girl Scouts, the highest award a Cadette Girl Scout can receive. She is also preparing for a state competition in gymnastics and is doing very well in this sport. Bruce has officially opened his business called, "Moosehead Sharpening and Machine." He is extremely busy and very happy. It sounds like they are all doing well and wanted to send out a special hello to all of their friends here and invite anyone for a stay with them, dog sledding anyone?

RELAY FOR LIFE

In anticipation of the American Cancer Society's fifth annual Relay For Life in Cohasset, relay committee is hosting a kickoff at 6:30 p.m., on Tuesday, Feb. 27 at the Lightkeeper's Residence, 15 Lighthouse Lane in Cohasset. The kickoff will include music by a string quartet from 6:30-7:30 p.m. and refreshments by the Red Parrot Restaurant of Hull. Anyone interested in attending the kickoff or learning more about the Relay For Life in Cohasset should contact event co-chairs, Craig Bleicken at 383-1502, Victor Vanderlugt at 383-2956 or Gordon Behrer at 617-770-7989. Relay For Life is the American Cancer Society's nationwide, signature fund-raising activity. Last year, 2700 relays took place throughout the United States. This year's relay event will take place at Cohasset High School from 3 p.m. Friday, May 18, through noon on Saturday, May 19. Relay teams of eight or more people, representing families, clubs, churches, neighborhoods and companies will join the race to beat cancer by walking, strolling or running around the high school track for the entire overnight event. Teams are encouraged to camp out in tents around the track and enjoy the festive atmosphere created by music, food and camaraderie. Anyone interested in finding out more about the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life is welcome to attend the kickoff..

BETTA PHENOMENON

Thirty members of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset recently prepared their own Betta Phenomenon. The project was introduced to the club by members of the horticultural committee, Ann Fee and Mary Sullvan, who presented the bettas in their unique and beautiful ecosystem. The betta is an anabantid, air-breathing freshwater tropical fish. It takes oxygen from the water, and also, breathes atmospheric air. The Peace Lily, with roots floating in the water, purifies the water. The betta feeds on the roots and refuse in the water. They live with little care in this vase arrangement for more than two years.

Other interesting workshops organized by the horticultural committee include, sharing favorite garden books, soil testing, multiplication and division, plant swapping and a field trip to Arnold Arboretum.

Well, that is all for this week. Please send me all of your news, birthdays, anniversaries, accomplishments or get-well messages are all welcomed along with any general news you may have. Call it in to me at 923-1057 Send it to me at 622 CJC Highway Email it to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com Thanks! Have a great week.

Cohasset Body Art Regulations
Summary

The Cohasset Board of Health under Massachusetts General Laws has adopted regulations governing licensing and practice of body artists and operation of an establishment for dispensing body art.

The purpose of these regulations is to protect the public's health by preventing diseases, such as hepatitis B and C and HIV. They establish procedures and standards for:

- registration of all persons performing body art;
- requirements for minimal training for the prevention of disease
- knowledge of anatomy and physiology,
- regular inspection of premises wherein body art is performed,
- revocation of the permit of any person or establishment

Nothing in the regulations shall be construed to,require the practitioner to perform a body art procedure upon a client.

A listing of definitions is provided in the regulations, giving explanations for such terms as scarification, braiding (prohibited), body piercing, branding, tattooing, ear piercing and other terms related to the application of body art.

The regulations contain rules such as the following:

- No minors shall receive body art; i.e. no person under the age of eighteen years.
- Mobile or temporary body art facilities are not permitted. Nor shall a residence be used as a body art establishment.
- No piercing or tattooing of animals shall be allowed in body art studios.
- Pre-procedural consultation to discuss body art, its risks and potential complications shall be required with each client.
- Tattooing and Body Piercing Kits shall not be sold to anyone under the age of 18 years.

Each body art practitioner must be a minimum of 21 years of age and shall practice in accordance with BOH regulations. Body artists and their employees must show evidence of current certification and or apprenticeship and completion of courses required in the BOH regulations, prior to receiving a Town body art practitioner permit. Body artists must have completed and passed an approved college course or courses dealing with preventing disease transmission, as well as two semesters of human anatomy and physiology courses from an accredited community college or university. Other courses relating to disease transmission are also required.

Body art facilities may be used for no other purpose, and must be set up, maintained and operated with rigorous cleanliness according to BOH regulations kept on file at the establishment.

All products applied to the skin, including needles and body art stencils, shall be single use and disposable. Sanitizing and sterilization procedures in accordance with BOH regulations shall be performed.

Each operator shall keep records of all body art procedures administered, including date, time, identification and location of the body art procedure(s) performed, and practitioner's name.

For a complete copy of Cohasset's body art regulations, contact the Board of Health at 781-383-4116.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Mayberry no more

Every Monday morning for the past 10 years we've been a regular visitor at the Cohasset Police Department. It's part of our routine. We stop by to pick up the police log for the prior seven days and to find out if anything is newsworthy.

So we speak to you with some first-hand knowledge of Cohasset police. We usually arrive around the time the shift changes about 8-8:30 a.m. If we're lucky we catch Sgt. Robert Jackson, who also wears the hat of police prosecutor, to find out who's been arraigned at Quincy District Court and what the next step is. If we miss Sgt. Jackson because he's at court, we call him later in the day and follow-up.

Over the years, we've seen the police in a range of situations. Incidents have run the gamut and include fatal car accidents, rapes, bank robberies, drug and alcohol arrests, domestic violence, robberies, break-ins, arson, sex offenses, stolen cars and so on.

We observed the police under the glare of the national media during the investigation of Michael Kennedy's alleged affair with his under-age babysitter. A teen's death after a graduation party in town one June and another teen killed in a tragic car crash four days before graduation the next year also created a media frenzy here that put the spotlight on the police department.

From our perspective, Cohasset police have consistently handled themselves in a professional manner even under the most difficult circumstances.

That wasn't always the case. As an article in a 1977 Boston Magazine points out, Cohasset and other small town police forces at the time were likened to "the gang that couldn't shoot straight." In those days, few if any of Cohasset police officers had formal training and those that did used Cohasset as a stepping-stone to go elsewhere. As the article quoted one cop, "As soon as a guy gets his academy training, he transfers to another force and gets the hell out of this town. Can you blame him?" Ammunition and guns were also at a premium with most officers buying their own.

So we find the recent "attitude" expressed by some members of the board of selectmen toward the police department's lack staff and outdated equipment to be a throwback to, as the article states, "the town content to live with things they way they are, until something happens."

There are several issues at work here that resulted in the police union's letter to selectmen last week saying lack of manpower, criticism over a request for new firearms and an outright anti-law enforcement stance by certain board members actions and words are having a negative effect on the police department.

One issue is budgetary and therefore, is fairly straightforward. There are currently three officers out on disability, a situation that has put the 17-member police force in a staffing crunch. Minimum manning requires three officers on duty at all times. The callbacks are driving the overtime budget through the roof. Currently the town is without any investigative services because the two detectives are back in uniform filling shifts.

The good news for the staffing issue is that through a federal grant, the town can pick up an additional officer with minimal impact to the town budget for three years. One new officer is not enough to solve the staffing problems, but supporting the grant with some matching town funds could go a ways toward lifting police morale.

The second issue is far more disturbing and harder to rectify. A group of parents in town, whose spokesman in the top office is Selectman Michael Sullivan, think police are "out to get" the teens in town. This has roots last summer when police arrested upwards of 20 minors at several under-age drinking parties in a single weekend. Some parents say police need to adopt a go-easy policy on first-time offenders in alcohol-related incidents and use "discretion" in their arrests.

There is little doubt sure that some "innocent" teens, who are guilty by association, are nabbed in cars or at parties. But these and other "first-time offenders" with no prior records are put in to diversion programs by the court and the arrest does not appear on their records. However, we think the experience of being arrested sends a strong message and could prevent a teenager from making the wrong choice again. But rather than using the opportunity of an arrest as a time to talk with their kids, some parents are instead thrashing out at the police and the Cohasset Mariner for printing the news.

There is also the issue of teen behavior. Twice in the past four years, teen melees involving dozens of local youngsters have taken over the village on Halloween — the first time, police were pelted with eggs and the second time, vandals painted obscene graffiti on the Osgood Playpark and exhibited lewd behavior.

We want to make it perfectly clear that the vast majority of Cohasset teenagers are great kids and will probably never see the inside of a police station. But while all parents want to believe their teenagers are well behaved and polite — the fact is, some are not. Innumerable times, we've been shocked by police description of the foul language and threats that flow out of a Cohasset teen's mouth following an arrest.

Selectmen need to show some real leadership to turn the negative spiral regarding police and some parents around. For starters, they should get behind police attempts to conduct a "Citizens Police Academy" — which has been so highly successful in other towns. The only town official to sign up for the second attempt to get one started here is former assessor Jim Laggrotteria. The academy had to be abandoned again for lack of interest.

The alternative to doing nothing is sitting by while relations between the town's selectmen and police continue to deteriorate. We think both sides will agree that is unacceptable.

This is not Mayberry or Cohasset of the '70s that was made out to be a laughingstock in the Boston Magazine story. Selectmen should realize times have changed. Cohasset may still be off the beaten track and is as beautiful as ever, but it is not an oasis that is immune to crime.

Granite ledge

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in response to Jim Shipsky's timely article," Granite heartbreak in Cohasset", which appeared if the Feb. 8 edition of the Mariner. If you missed it, I strongly recommend you find a copy because Mr. Shipsky's ideas and thoughts are both inspiring and insightful.

Like Mr. Shipsky, I am very concerned with the wanton destruction of our natural world. Just take a quick ride around town and it becomes obvious that the balance between development and preserving natural space has definitely been tipped in favor of development. This "bigger is better" mentality and the "profit at any cost" mind set are changing forever our beautiful little town.

I feel Jim Shipsky voiced these kinds of concerns in a touching manner, He also shows his character by publicly admitting that he had changed his point of view regarding the blasting of ledge in the village.

In conclusion, I would implore the Selectmen and other town boards to act to save granite ledge in particular, and other natural areas in general so we can ensure future generations the natural beauty, clean air, and clean water that I believe all of us have a moral obligation to protect.

Support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to thank the people of Cohasset for all their friendship and support during the illness of my mother, Jean Higgins.

A lifelong resident, Jean loved the town of Cohasset and served it well over the years in many capacities. She worked in the school system for 20 years but was perhaps best known for her extensive volunteer work–giving of her time to the Cohasset Food Pantry, driving the Senior Shuttle and serving the Senior lunches for the Council on Elder Affairs, making food and knitting hats for the Pine Street Inn, volunteering at the library and the Red Cross Blood Drive–among other things.

Although there is a "giving gap" (my brother Jim's phrase) because she is gone, it is very clear that the spirit of giving is alive and well in Cohasset. The outpouring of love and support shown by the entire community (from individuals and organizations alike) has been truly overwhelming — all the kind words and offers to help, the concerned calls, cards and visits, the flowers and baked goods and meals. It made a very difficult time more tolerable — and oftentimes spiritual — because we were surrounded by the warmth and love of others.

There are no words to express the gratitude in my heart but please know that your collective kindness made a world of difference in our lives. It just goes to show that what you give comes back to you a hundred-fold.

Valentine Soiree

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset PSO Fundraising Committee would like to thank all of the people who helped to make this past weekends St. Valentines Soiree the success that it was. To all the families who donated for the gorgeous baskets, the staff at the Osgood and Deer Hill schools for all of the help they gave in the collection of these items, to the Reps at the Middle School for all of the work that went into your baskets and the families who donated to them and to all of the behind-the-scenes people, THANK YOU!!!! We also had several local businesses who donated to our Chinese Basket Raffle: Cards and Shards, French Memories, Cohasset Hardware, Good Sports, The Froio Family, Adrian Morris, Charlottes, Hair Imports, Pastimes, Strecker Eye Care, Josephs Hardware, Trish Fortin, The Shoe Market, Dunkin Donuts Barefoot Rugs, Par-tee, Sweet Surprises, Wilburs and Buttonwood Books, thank you for all the wonderful donations.

Wolf Pit property

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in response to last week's "Wolf Pit" article to express my concern over potential development on this property. As a Doane Street resident, I am familiar with the area and do not see where there is space for a 27-unit complex so close to our reservoir that will not affect our water supply. I feel a housing development will endanger our water supply as well as the natural beauty of the town. The reservoir area is one of our town treasures that is used by many residents for recreation and enjoyment.

I agree with Mr. Sawchuk that we need affordable senior housing in town however; I do not agree that the former wolf pit is a suitable site. I am extremely apprehensive about the use of a comprehensive permit. Many of the local issues involved in the development of this property will be overlooked as such a permit allows Mr. Sawchuk to circumvent the local zoning bylaws.

I ask that residents go to Town Meeting to support the town's purchase of this land to protect our water supply as well as to conserve the land. These types of open spaces enrich Cohasset in immeasurable ways. Please help us preserve this unique piece of property that ads so much to the town's character.

Library sale

TO THE EDITOR:

I am not opposed to the plans for a new library in the renovated Osgood School. However, I am opposed to any sale of the existing Paul Pratt Library that would result in its inaccessibility to the public. It is apparent to me that the Cohasset Historical Society is not prepared to assume a leadership role in assuring continued public use of the Pratt Library. The Directors of the Historical Society believe that their "plate is full" maintaining the properties that they already have: The Lothrup and Wilson houses as well as the Maritime Museum. Perhaps they are correct.

An alternative possibility would be to locate the Superintendent of Schools and his administrative staff in the Paul Pratt Library. This alternative could save some renovation expenses at the Middle/High School. Please become involved by supporting some option that will preserve public access to the Paul Pratt Library.

Thermal imaging fund drive

TO THE EDITOR:

Our fund has reached $11,500 to date. We continue to strive to reach the goal of $25,000. The most recent system demonstrated was $35,000. If we can reach the goal by June coupled with the $13,000 grant the town received from the state (June is deadline for grant money to be used), one of the best systems available will be purchased for our fire department.

Thermal imaging has the unique ability to detect objects of vast temperature ranges simultaneously. This gives us the ability to see through smoke and finally see what we are doing. That is something that has been missing in firefighting since firefighting began. What does that mean? Seeing though smoke allows finding trapped victims faster. Locating the seat of a fire faster, which means less damage to the building.

Here is some information about who we are and what we do. We are the Call Firefighters of the Cohasset Fire Department. If you are not familiar with Call Firefighters, we respond to all alarms of fire in Cohasset and all mutual aid, that Cohasset is call to in other towns. We are appointed to the department and are paid by the town. All members are trained to at least Firefighter I level (national standard) or higher and as First Responder (which is basic emergency medical care) or higher, several members are EMTs.

We have been giving a scholarship each year for the past 30 to a Cohasset high graduate, more than $15,000.

When we see a new product or a piece of equipment that will make our or the permanent firefighter job safer and benefit the public we serve in emergency situations, we will evaluate and consider purchasing and donating it to the town. Some of the equipment donated includes:

1. Cohasset's first Hurst Rescue tool (Jaws of Life); 2. Cold water survival suits; 3. Upgrade for oxygen resuscitators; 4. First-aid jump kits for each engine; 5. Traction splints; 6. Chain saws; 7. Scuba equipment; 8. Ice rescue sled. More than $15,000 in equipment.

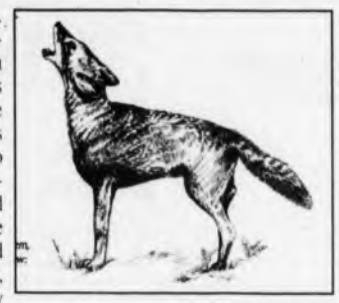
How to keep wild animals off your property



The following information is reprinted with permission from MassWildlife.

Conflicts with wildlife most often arise when animals find readily available food or shelter in close proximity to people. To minimize the chances of conflict, concerned homeowners should take common sense precautions to make their property unattractive to species including coyote, fox, black bear, skunk and raccoon.

ANIMAL CONTROL

PAUL MURPHY 383-9119

First, people should eliminate or make inaccessible all food sources that might be used by wildlife. Trash, garbage and compost should be kept in closed containers while vegetable gardens should be fenced-off and dropped fruit picked-up. Lawns should be treated for grub infestations. Pets should be fed indoors and dog bones and rawhide chew toys taken in after use. Grills should be kept clean and drip cups changed frequently to eliminate odors. Bird feeders should be removed in early spring as the seed attracts small mammals and the larger mammals that prey on them. Bears and wild turkey are particularly fond of seeds and will return to bird feeders regularly. All pets should be kept indoors or under the immediate control of the owner as cats in particular are vulnerable to predation by coyotes and can contract diseases from infected skunks, raccoons or bats. Cats are efficient predators themselves and frequently bring home songbirds, chipmunks, rabbits and mice they have killed. These dead animals may attract coyotes, foxes and other scavengers who will return in search of these easy meals.

The backyard should also be made unattractive to wildlife by eliminating any shelter. Wood piles, brush piles, construction debris, crawl spaces under porches or out-buildings, abandoned vehicles and thick, brushy undergrowth all provide shelter for prey species such as insects, rabbits, snakes, woodchucks, mice and the predators that seek them. Clean up the debris and block off any crawl spaces or similar areas that could be used as hiding places or den sites. Fencing can be an effective means of excluding many types of wild animals while confining pets. The undergrowth along edges where yards meet woodlands can be cut back to provide a sterile, park-like appearance.

Finally, wildlife perceives people as predators and that perception should be reinforced whenever possible. If coyotes or foxes persistently show up in the yard after all food and shelter has been removed, they should be scared-off by adults using loud noises, bright lights, thrown objects, a garden hose or any combination thereof. Regulated hunting seasons further reinforce man's role as a predator while utilizing valuable, abundant and renewable wildlife resources.

Local animal control, police and public health officials should be notified if wildlife appears, sick, confused, disoriented, lethargic or appears to have lost its wariness of people. Local health officials must be notified if there is any physical contact, such as a bite or scratch, between a wild mammal and a person. Licensed Problem Animal Control specialists can be hired to remove raccoons from chimneys, squirrels from attics and can address other similar situations. Check the yellow pages under Pest Control Services.

By taking simple, common sense precautions, Massachusetts residents can learn to coexist with the wildlife around us.

Paul Murphy is the Cohasset animal control officer.

COHASSET CARES

Of things and warmth

by Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I'll never be the same after reading this book. I just wonder how many others might be deeply affected by it also.

The author appears to me to be very realistic. He certainly writes clearly, and interestingly, because he not only has a sense of humor, he reveals himself to have the average American's love of creature comforts, a loving relationship with his mate, a great appreciation for our freedom and opportunities.

But in at least one very important way Bill McKibben really stands out. Of the people I have read in my rather feverish attempt to absorb as much as possible about the environment, Bill McKibben is the first one, in my estimation, to have it all together, to see the big picture. Everything he says makes sense. And he has a very important message.

Our lives as consumers, our love of things, he says, drives the use of fossil fuels, which create global warming, which is a huge change we have made in the climate of the globe. The warning signs are perceptible now — the melting icecaps, the increased severity of storms, forests damaged by acid rain, the increase in the ozone holes.

We have meddled with the planet and have done a lot of damage to it. Though the title of his book is "The End of Nature," it is possible, McKibben points out, to live lightly but still comfortably. He wants to hope. That is, he hopes our ability to reason will prevail, reason that indicates we must live more humbly. See you next time.

LIBRARY CORNER

Vacation tea

The Cohasset Dramatic Club, in conjunction with the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will present a tea for children ages 6 years old and up during the school vacation, Thursday, Feb. 22, at 1 p.m. at the library.

The cast of the current dramatic club production, "How to Eat Like a Child," will be on hand to entertain all who attend. Originally written for TV, this fast-paced musical revue takes you through a romp into the joys and sorrows of being a child and consists of 23 funny lessons on how to behave like a child.

Call the library at 383-1348 to sign up. Attendance will be limited to the first 50 children who are registered.

Museum passes

As February school vacation approaches, please remember that the following passes are offered to all Cohasset residents.

The museum passes funded by the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library are: The Museum of Fine Arts; Boston Children's Museum; The Computer Museum; John F. Kennedy Library & Museum; The New England Aquarium; The Museum of Science and The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum.

Other passes to Plimoth Plantation and to the USS Constitution are available and are a gift of Lucille McLoughlin.

An information sheet about the museums, including addresses, hours and phone numbers is available at the front desk. Call the library 24 hours ahead at 383-1348 to secure passes.

Postcards

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library are selling postcards of the library cupola. Designed by Cohasset artist, Joanne Chittick, five postcards may be purchased for $5 at the following businesses: The South Shore Art Center, Buttonwood Books and Toys, Cards 'n Shards, Flemings, and Nobles. They are also available at the front desk of the library.

They are wonderful for quick notes to local friends or to those who know Cohasset and live at a distance. All proceeds help support a number of programs at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

HEALTH NOTES

February is American Heart Month

The American Heart Association in conjunction with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has proclaimed that Feb. 2001 is American Heart Month. The National Institute of Health has set heart health goals in their Healthy People 2010 Plan. The initiatives which will be pursued are a high blood pressure education program, an obesity education initiative, a heart attack alert program and a cholesterol education program.

Cardiovascular disease and stroke was the second leading cause of death in Cohasset after all types of cancer in 1998, the last year for which statistics are available. High blood pressure presently affects about 28 percent of people over 20 years of age in the United States. Reducing weight, increasing physical activity and reducing salt intake can all help to reduce blood pressure. Hints on how to control or reduce blood pressure are available at the Public Health Nurse's Office at the Social Service League in St. Stephen's Church. If you have high blood pressure controlled by medication, be sure that your pressure is checked regularly. That too can be done by the public health nurse.

As part of the Board of Health's cholesterol program, free cholesterol and blood pressure screenings will be offered Feb. 15, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church. This screening is underwritten by the Cohasset Rotary Club. In older adults high cholesterol is a major risk factor for coronary heart disease, the leading cause of morbidity and mortality in older men and women. Cholesterol lowering drugs are available and may be appropriate for some elders. This needs evaluation by your physician. Trials have shown that these drugs significantly lower coronary heart disease events and mortality. However, in most cases, older patients will need better dietary and drug therapy to lower a high cholesterol level. Consult your physician for an evaluation of your needs.

Cardiovascular disease and stroke was the second leading cause of death in Cohasset after all types of cancer in 1998, the last year for which statistics are available.

This year the American Heart Association is launching a campaign to alert everyone to cardiac emergencies. Everyone should know the warning signs of cardiac arrest. There are three steps everyone should know to improve the cardiac arrest survival rate:

1. Know the warning signs: heart attack, electrocution, drowning, and choking or trauma.
2. Call 9-1-1 immediately to access the emergency medical system.
3. Give cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR).

You can call the American Heart Association by dialing 1-877-AMA-4CPR or by visiting their website at www.cpr-ecc.americanheart.org to find out how you can learn CPR.

Give your heart a break:

- Keep your blood pressure at normal levels.
- Eat a heart healthy diet and reduce salt intake.
- Reduce your weight.
- Exercise.
- Keep your cholesterol below 200.

Health notes is compiled by the Cohasset Board of Health.

Thanks for help

TO THE EDITOR:

The Scituate Historical Society would like to thank both Shaw's and Stop & Shop of Cohasset for contributing baked goods to our first-ever CookieFest this past Sunday at the Scituate Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum on the Driftway. Their donations helped put smiles on the faces of more than 80 visitors to the museum in just three hours, on an otherwise frigid and windy wintry day. Thank you both for helping to make our first Valentine's Day cookie event so much fun!

Lady Jane

HENSHAW

If all goes according to Dubya's plan, and Jesse Helms permits it, Paul Cellucci will become ambassador to Canada in the spring and Massachusetts will have its first woman governor, a woman governor pregnant with twins, no less.

I don't know how many of you have noticed, but the last time Jane Swift was in a family way, with daughter Elizabeth, now 2, she was running for lieutenant governor and gave birth two weeks before the 1998 election.

Was it the charm of the Cellucci-Swift ticket that attracted the voters or was it Baby Elizabeth? There is a whole school of political thought that holds that, given the choice of a veteran politician and an innocent baby, the voters will take the kid 50.1 per cent of the time.

I happened to be in a mid-town Manhattan bar ordering a mart . . . er, getting change for the Coke machine at the height of the 1960 election campaign when I overheard two PR people commiserating about Jackie Kennedy's pregnancy.

The other 24 per cent said, "Jane, who?"

"So you're doing press for Dick Nixon and she has the baby the day before election," said one flack to the other. "What do you do?"

I didn't catch the other guy's reply but it didn't matter because John-John was born three weeks after the election and we'll never get an answer to the first guy's question.

But I digress . . .

In spite of a furious campaign of fence mending, Jane will start her term as governor — some call her "acting governor" — with the lowest rating of anyone who ever occupied the corner office of the State House.

And she hasn't even taken the oath yet!

A poll taken by The Boston Herald in December showed that only 17 per cent of the electorate had a favorable view of our lieutenant governor while 59 per cent viewed her unfavorably. The other 24 per cent said, "Jane, who?"

Even The Boston Globe, which is inclined to find some good in a triple axe-murderer as long as she is a she and not a he, could locate only 20 per cent of the voting public who looked favorably on Lady Jane.

This is because she was fined $1,250 by the State Ethics Commission for using members of her State House staff to baby-sit Elizabeth and even got yelled at by her own party for borrowing a State Police helicopter and crew to fly home to North Adams for Thanksgiving.

She also came under fire for taking a part time teaching job at Suffolk University for $25,000 a year, a fairly common occurrence among our Bay State's pols of the male persuasion. Nevertheless, Jane was forced to hang up her chalk and erasers.

Jane, as the first woman governor of Massachusetts, roused my curiosity. ,

Who was the first female state representative? That would be M. Sylvia Donaldson, Republican, of Brockton; and Susan W. Fitzgerald, Democrat, of Boston, both of whom were elected in November, 1922.

Who was the first woman state senator? Sybil H. Holmes, Republican, of Brookline, elected in 1936.

Who was the state's first selectwoman? Annie Skelley Lynch, Non-Partisan, of Weymouth, elected in 1923.

When her grand nephew, Rep. Bill Connell, went to her for advice prior to his first run for the State House in 1952, "she told me firmly she didn't want anything to do with politics," he said. "She did not want to get involved."

Maybe Jane Swift will be tempted to say the same thing after a year and a half in the governor's chair.

BOATS AT REST

Boats wait out the winter season on Government Island.

Murray says no to board run...this year

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Recently retired state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray said she has decided to "sit this one out" and will not run for selectman this year.

She said a number of people have told her she'd have their vote if she did run, but Murray said she thinks she should just wait a year to get organized.

Murray, the Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year, said she'd prefer to run for an open seat, as opposed to against an incumbent. This year, current Selectman Merle Brown and Chairman Thomas Callahan will seek reelection. It will be Callahan's second term, and Brown's fourth.

Both Brown and Callahan have returned their candidate forms, as have Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo, Water Commissioner Robert Kasameyer, School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo, Paul Pratt Library Trustees June Hubbard, Sarah Pease, and Barbara Power.

Also on the ballot will be Richard Brown for the open planning board seat, and Sean Cunning for sewer commissioner.

No one has taken out papers yet for an open seat on the Recreation Commission.

Today is the last day to take out papers for town office. Town elections are April 7.

Other that have taken papers out are Cohasset Housing Authority member John Muncey, Board of Assessors member Elsa Miller, School Committee Chairman Pat Martin, and interim Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt. Pratt took over for Chip Muncey, who resigned in January. He is running for a one-year seat to full out Muncey's term.

Nomination papers for the annual town election are now available at the Town Clerk's Office.

Two battles loom for town positions. Pleasant Street resident George Haley has taken out papers to run for a seat on the Paul Pratt Library Board of Trustees, along with incumbents Pease, Power and Hubbard. Town voters elect three people to a three-year term.

Also, Osgood PSO member Adrienne MacCarthy is looking to run against DeGiacomo and Martin, the first incumbents to seek reelection to the school committee since 1994.

Current planning board member Terry Atherton, sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury, and Recreation Commission member Thomas Wigmore have decided not to seek reelection..

Nomination papers for the annual town election are now available at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions are up for grabs:

Selectmen - two for three years

School Committee - two for three years

Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three for three years

Assessor - one for three years

Board of Health - one for three years

Cohasset Housing Authority - one for five years

Planning Board - one for five years

Recreation Commission - one for five years

Sewer Commission - one for three years

Water Commission - one for three years, one for one year to fill an unexpired term

All papers are due into the Town Clerk's Office by Tuesday, Feb. 20.

Legislators get first automated pay hike

SENATE REPORT

BOB HEDLUND

As we start this new legislative session, I wanted to take a moment to brief you on a number of issues, some old and some new, which may be of interest to you. Developments in the areas of Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) testing, the Prescription Advantage Plan for seniors, simulcast racing, the proposal for runway expansion at Logan Airport, the Mass-American Water Rate case, state credits for local or regional transportation services, the Voluntary Optional Tax Endowment (VOTE) bill filed by Citizens for Limited Taxation, and, last but not least, the pay increase that recently went into effect for the state's legislators, are some of the hot issues at hand.

Legislative Pay Raise

Let's start with the bad news. On Jan. 3 legislators received their first automatic pay raise under the terms of a constitutional amendment, requiring raises of 5-6 percent. This move makes the Massachusetts legislature the only entity with a constitutionally guaranteed pay raise in America. I voted against this constitutional amendment, which was voted on in two consecutive sessions. I feel that legislators should be accountable to the voters for all legislative actions and votes, including pay raise measures, and that such guarantees take the power out of the citizens' hands and encourage a sense of entitlement amongst lawmakers.

Voluntary Optional Tax Endowment (VOTE)

Now that the majority of citizens have spoken and the state's income tax rollback will be taking effect, Citizens for Limited Taxation has come up with a unique idea for legislation that should satisfy many concerned with the state's ability to raise revenues in the future. The bill establishes a Voluntary Optional Tax Endowment, which will allow those persons who opposed the tax cut to continue to pay the higher rate. This initiative should set pro-taxation citizens' minds at ease.

MCAS Testing

The good news on the MCAS front is that towns in the Plymouth/Norfolk district have seen at least some measure of improvement in test scores, with Braintree being singled out among a small handful of Massachusetts's towns by the Department of Education for substantially improving its performance. Governor Cellucci and Lt. Governor Swift, mindful of the fact that starting in 2003 high school students will be required to earn a passing score of 220 on the MCAS test in order to graduate, have proposed a number of new policies to ensure that the tests are fair, and that students who fail are not abandoned but given the help they need to leap this important hurdle. They are supporting a student appeals process that would allow students who failed the grade 10 test by four or fewer points to argue before school and state officials that their tests should be reevaluated; alternative degree requirements for special education students called "certificates of competency" which would not be a diploma and would not grant access to state colleges, but would recognize their achievements; and involvement of the state's higher education system in K-12 education reforms. Another central component of the Cellucci/Swift plan is use of the state's 15 community colleges to provide remedial programs for all students who fail the MCAS.

Obviously there are many differences of opinion about the future of the MCAS test in the state, and there are many legislative proposals on the table, including one bill requiring suspension of the use of the MCAS as a graduation requirement. As we move forward in this debate I will continue to listen to students and teachers – those most affected by the new standards – and advocate for their rights at every step in the discussion.

The Prescription Advantage Plan for Seniors and the Disabled

The Prescription Advantage Plan for seniors and the disabled, authorized recently by the legislature, is being implemented by the Executive Office of Elder Affairs during 2001. The plan provides prescription drug coverage for Massachusetts residents over the age of 65 and low-income disabled residents under the age of 65. The prescription insurance plan will provide eligible residents with an option for affordable prescription drug insurance. Enrollees will pay premiums, deductibles and co-payments at a graduated rate based on gross household income, and the Commonwealth will pay the premiums and deductibles for certain low-income enrollees. A mail service program will also be available. The Plan began enrolling people Jan. 1. Persons interested in enrolling should call 1-800-AGE-INFO (TTY: 1-800-872-0166) as soon as possible for an application.

Local and Regional Transport Services for the Disabled

Last year you may remember I co-sponsored a bill which the legislature passed into law allowing cities and towns that create local or regional transportation services for the disabled to receive a 50 percent credit for the cost of operating these services, to be deducted from the following year's MBTA assessment. This year I am joining with other legislators in asking the MBTA to develop clear guidelines for this program for eligible communities. The towns of Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury stand to benefit from this credit since they pay the MBTA subsidy but do not have access to The RIDE, but guidelines must be established so that these communities will know what kinds of services are reimbursable.

Simulcast Racing in the Commonwealth

As a member of the Government Regulations Committee, which oversees the horse and dog racing industries, I have supported efforts to end greyhound racing in Massachusetts. As you may know, the statute regarding the simulcast of dog and horse racing was recently extended for six months, through July 1, 2001. What happens this year in the legislature on this issue will likely determine the industry's fate in the Commonwealth.

I am deeply concerned about the issues raised throughout this debate. I am sensitive to your concerns, and promise to continue to advocate on your behalf as we move forward with this important public policy issue. I will continue to support responsible legislation designed to bring about an end to greyhound racing in Massachusetts.

Logan Airport Runway Expansion

A number of constituents in my district are quite disturbed about the status of the proposal to expand the current runway system at Boston's Logan Airport, since noise pollution on the South Shore has already increased substantially over the communities of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset during the past few years. For example, additional air traffic generated by the proposed 14/32 runway would result in 75,000 more jet arrivals flying over Hull annually. The final decision has been delayed by the Federal Aviation Administration while outstanding questions are resolved. Congestion and delays have plagued Logan for some time, but solutions which take into account the general public's interest in improved air transportation facilities must also equally weigh the quality of life issues vital to these South Shore communities, and I will continue to advocate on their behalf.

Mass American Water Rate Case

Many of you in the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset have received notices from Mass-American Water Company detailing their plans for a 16 percent water rate increase. At this stage the Department of Telecommunications and Energy (DTE) is just beginning preparations to hear the case presented by Mass American. I offered testimony myself in Hingham and Hull against the rate increase at public hearings sponsored by DTE in January. I plan to keep a close eye on DTE's investigation of the request and its hearing process. I wholeheartedly support the affected towns' efforts to contest the increase.

New State House Office

Following the fall election, Senate Minority Leader Brian P. Lees had the wisdom to name me to his leadership team. Along with some new responsibilities I now have a new title, Assistant Minority Whip, and a new state house address: Room 309, State House, Boston, MA 02133-1053. The telephone number remains the same: (617) 722-1646.

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, represents the Plymouth-Norfolk District that includes Hingham.

Bradley elected class officer

State Rep. Garret Bradley D-Hingham has been elected by his fellow classmates as Freshman Class Vice President. In a Freshman Caucus held Monday, Bradley was nominated and then elected.

"I felt running for class officer was a good idea to ensure that this years Freshman Class be the best it can possibly be to carryout legislative issues that are important to us," Bradley said.

On Monday the representative also moved into his new permanent address at the State House. He is now in the Government Regulations Committee office, room 472. His new phone number is (617) 722-2120.

Bradley can also be seen at his in district office hours this Friday, Feb. 16, in Hingham Town Hall, Second Floor meeting room, or next Friday, Feb. 23, in the Stop & Shop, second floor community meeting room, in Cohasset, 400 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, both from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

Democrats caucus in Cohasset

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will hold a caucus at the Town Hall March 3, at 10 a.m. to elect five delegates and five alternates to the 2001 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women.

The convention will be held Saturday, June 2, at the Springfield Civic Center in Springfield. The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Cohasset. Candidates for delegate and alternate must consent to nomination in writing. All candidates may make a two-minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots will be written and secret. Those registered Democrats unable to attend may be considered for delegate and alternate by 2/3 of those present and voting. Those not elected as delegate and alternate may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 129 Portland St., Boston, 02114 no later than 10 days after the caucus date.

For more information, call the Democratic State Committee at (617) 742 6770.

Bradley honored in Who's Who registry

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, has been accepted by The National Registry of Who's Who as a Life Member.

The National Registry of Who's Who is a nationally distributed biographical publication for professionals. The organization chooses people by a search procedure or on a recommendation of an existing member.

"I am honored to be recognized by such a prestigious organization," Bradley said.

Bradley can still be reached in his temporary office in State House Room 437, or called at 617-722-2800 ext. 7315.

Brown questions need for full-time town planner

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Playing the role of the fiscal conservative, selectman Merle Brown questioned the line item in the proposed fiscal year-2002 town operating budget that would expand the town planner position from part to full-time.

"I have nothing against [current part-time town planner Liz Harrington] but I just don't think a small town like this needs a full-time planner," he said at the selectmen's meeting Tuesday night.

Harrington was brought in last summer and splits her time between Cohasset and Hull, at a cost of $25,000 to the town. If moved to full-time, Harrington would receive $48,000.

Brown said though it would be nice to have a full-time town planner, the town just shouldn't add additional staff right now.

But Brown, who is up for reelection this spring, was vastly outnumbered in terms of support for the position.

Town Manager Mark Haddad ran off a list of projects the town will be facing over the next four years such as the creation of a town-wide master plan, dealing with village and harbor beautification issues, the final stage of the James Brook flood control project, possible restoration and construction of the Greenbush commuter rail line, developing an open space preservation plan, and helping out with the town planning board, zoning board of appeals, growth and planning committee, as justification of the need for a full-time planner.

"The need is absolute," said selectman Ronnie McMorris, who praised Harrington's work with the senior housing committee. "In the near-term, we are going to need a full-time planner."

""I'm a real conservative anti-spend guy, but if you can't justify this, what can you justify?""
— Planning Board Chairman Al Moore

Selectman Chairman Thomas Callahan, who has been working with the growth and planning committee, said a full-time planner will be essential when drawing up a master plan, adding it would cost a lot more to contract it out.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said, "If you think you need a planner today, wait until five years form now. You'll laugh at this discussion." He said Harrington has brought a level of professionalism to the board that hadn't existed previously. "When I first came on 15 years ago, the planning board was just some folksy group that made some, frankly, arbitrary decisions. Now developers come in with court stenographers and lawyers at their elbows," Moore told selectmen. "Bringing in someone like Liz has been a breath of fresh air."

He also said Harrington has saved the board thousands in legal costs, because they can send questions to her instead of town counsel. "I'm a real conservative anti-spend guy, but if you can't justify this, what can you justify?" Moore said. He also suggested using some of the money the board collects on the sale of zoning maps to partially fund her position.

Haddad battled Brown's assertion that the addition of a full-time planner was an unnecessary expense that would expand the budget. "We just don't add positions willy-nilly," he said. "We did not go into this decision lightly. There was a lot of thought and a lot of debate that went into this decision. We're already using her 30 hours a week now." Haddad continued to say he has reduced town hall staff by three positions since he came to the town in 1997, and that the addition of a full-time town planner would improve services available to the town.

Brown reminded the board of the looming signs of an economic slowdown and the accompanying reduction of new growth in the town. "There's a lot of things that's going to happen. We have to say we'd like to have it but we can't," he said.

Despite his protest, selectmen voted 4-1 to support the full-time town planner.

ZBA gives marina green light

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The two-year battle over the Cohasset Harbor Marina came to an end this week, when the town Zoning Board of Appeals granted the marina a special permit that allows it to keep its dock addition, but said that the special permit would be subject to a yearly review.

The review would allow abutters and other neighbors of the Parker Avenue marina a chance to tell the zoning board if the marina has been a 'good boating neighbor', as is required by one of the special permit's conditions.

ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick realized the decision won't make either side completely happy but that there was something for everyone.

"The decision wasn't a compromise, it recognized the merits of both sides," he said. "The decision provides for automatic renewal unless interested parties have a reason to object. If the marina is not living up to conditions imposed on it, neighbors have a forum which they can come into armed with facts rather than vague allegations."

In 1998, CHM owner Paul Trendowicz extended the marina's dock 280 feet into Bailey's Creek, and expanded the number of slips from 47 to 85, after receiving the needed state and federal permits. However, the ZBA ruled that the area the dock extended into a residentially-zoned area and was in violation of zoning laws. Trendowicz appealed the decision, and the case remains in land court.

But Trendowicz came back last October to argue that the marina was a pre-existing non-conforming use, and just needed a special permit to be legal. Angry residents complaining of speeding boat owners, and a trash-filled creek, said the marina didn't meet the special permit's condition that requires the marina to not be detrimental to the neighborhood or pose a safety or health hazard.

"If the marina is not living up to conditions imposed on it, neighbors have a forum which they can come into armed with facts rather than vague allegations."
— ZBA chairman Woody Chittick

The ZBA, based upon testimony from Harbormaster John Winters, Assistant Harbormaster Robert Baggs, former owner Diane Figueiredo, and Robert Pattison, said enough evidence existed to show "some sort of marine activity" was going on at the site, before the 1969 zoning change. Therefore, says Chittick, it was a pre-existing non-conforming use.

"The historical record was less than crystal clear," Chittick admitted, but said, "We had a lot of testimony and evidence presented from people that did prove to be influential in the decision."

The ZBA rejected the argument that what was going on at the site pre-1969 didn't constitute a "marina," by writing in its decision, "...because Cohasset's bylaws have been silent on size as a defining element of a marina, any dock or float which has at least one rented space is a marina...".

Neighbors had complained in public hearings of speeding cars and trash in the water as examples of the marina not being a good neighbor. But both Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan and Harbormaster Winters testified there has not been a large increase in complaints. As a result, the ZBA ruled "the impact on the neighborhood...may well be somewhat more detrimental that the prior operation, but we are not convinced by evidence presented that these impacts rise to the 'substantially more detrimental' standard set by the bylaw."

But if all goes right, neighbors will have the ability to force an annual review of the special permit. The ZBA attached five conditions to the special permit which Trendowicz has to renew yearly.

Residents are able to file written objections to the renewal, which is then subject to a public hearing. The ZBA said, however, the objections are limited to whether the marina abides by the good boating neighbor conditions. Trendowicz will also have to provide boaters with a copy of the good boating neighbor rules.

Parker Avenue resident, and vocal opponent of the marina Russ Bonetti said he wasn't surprised by the ruling, but was critical of its conditions. "Zoning laws should be written and not just 'Let's see how things go'," he said.

Logan runway fight rages on

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The battle against a new runway at Logan airport continues in full force.

Two members of the South Shore Jet Noise Council, one from Hingham and the other a former Hingham resident, would like to ask Town Meeting to appropriate funds to the South Shore Aviation Fund to assess noise and pollution impacts of the proposed Logan Runway 1432.

Richard Goldhammer and Eric Oddleifson, now a Cohasset resident, urged selectmen Tuesday to support an appropriation of not more than $75,000 for two years to be used at the Hingham selectmen's discretion for that purpose.

"We're concerned about water quality and pollution. Even if planes were to fly higher, the pollutants have to go somewhere," Goldhammer said. "This is a public health issue."

Both men are members of the South Shore Jet Noise Council. The group is lobbying against the current plan and has put forward a number of proposals aimed at influencing the direction of the current policy discourse revolving around the subject.

Noise and pollution impacts, possible health hazards and the potential negative effect on some property values top the list of concerns.

According to Oddleifson, there would be an increase of approximately 35 percent in air traffic over the South Shore if the runway plan becomes a reality.

Goldhammer is also a member of Hingham's jet noise task force. Voters at last year's town meeting supported a warrant article asking selectmen to do everything in their power to protect the town from noise and other impacts of jet air traffic to and from Logan Airport.

Goldhammer said the funds, if appropriated, would be used in conjunction with those appropriated by other South Shore communities to pay for research concerning the air pollution impact and possible health hazards associated with jet emissions, noise monitors and potential legal proceedings if necessary.

"We need a thorough study," Goldhammer said.

Some time ago, Hingham selectmen called for a moratorium on the project until an adequate environmental study was made and are taking a proactive approach.

Hingham, Cohasset and other South Shore communities are already being hammered with high noise levels during all hours of the day and night.

"We're concerned about water quality and pollution. Even if planes were to fly higher, the pollutants have to go somewhere."
— Richard Goldhammer, jet noise task force

The South Shore Jet Noise Council is making a grass-roots organizational effort to convene South Shore governments and citizen representatives from Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Hull and Weymouth to make recommendations to Massport regarding the Runway 1432 proposal.

To that end, the council has retained a noise consultant with private funds.

"We believe we're already being impacted at a severe level, especially in Hull," Oddleifson said. "If traffic triples over the South Shore, the situation will worsen and there will be increased air pollution impacts."

That's why the Council has approached the Harvard School of Public Health and Center of Environmental Health at Massachusetts Institute of Technology about studying the issue.

"We've been gathering data about diseases related to jet emissions," Oddleifson said.

A draft environmental impact report about the project is scheduled to be released in March, followed by a public comment period. The final environmental report is expected in May. A final decision would likely be made within a month or two after that.

Massport's recent application to the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) for clearance to construct the new runway resulted in an FAA request for more study.

Consequently, a blue ribbon study panel was appointed – half by Gov. Paul Cellucci, who supports the proposal, and half by Mayor Thomas Menino, who opposes the plan.

Even though South Shore communities are expected to be impacted greatly by the new runway, there's not one representative from that area on the blue ribbon panel, which is studying the effects of the proposal.

"There's something un-American about those who are being affected not being able to participate in the process," said selectman Mathew MacIver.

Still, he said, "We have to work towards a solution, not an oppositional bad end."

The selectmen, while generally supportive of the South Shore Jet Noise Council's goals as well as the warrant article, will decide whether or not to support it at a later date.

For the most part, their concerns revolve around how much money should be appropriated.

"It would be money well spent to the degree we can afford it," MacIver said. "On the other hand, can we afford not to do it?"

Other voices at the Abbey

The Glastonbury series, "Listening to Other Voices: the Way of Prayer in our Religious Traditions" will feature Rabbi Nechama Goldberg, Margaret Bullitt-Jonas, and Tina Malik. The women will talk on "Speaking From Experience: The Voices of Three Women in their Tradition of Prayer", on Thursday, March 1 at 7:15 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham.

Three women of different faith traditions share their experience of prayer in the fourth offering of The Glastonbury Series, 2000-2001, the annual interfaith spirituality series sponsored by the Benedictine monks of Glastonbury Abbey.

Rabbi Nechama Goldberg spent four years as a pulpit rabbi and is the director of administration and finance for Hebrew College. Rabbi Goldberg holds a BA in elementary education from Hofstra University and an MBA from Adelphi University. Margaret Bullitt-Jonas is an Episcopal priest, associate pastor of All Saints Parish in Brookline, and a teacher at Episcopal Divinity School. Her memoir, "Holy Hunger", is about her struggle with an eating disorder and the spiritual longing behind the addiction. Tina Malik was born in Pakistan. She is currently the principal of the Sunday School of the Islamic Center in Boston. She holds a Masters Degree in political science.

The lectures are free. Donations are welcome. Call the monastery to reserve a place (781) 749-2155.

Boys hit a rough patch

Skippers will try to move past three losses and focus on tourney

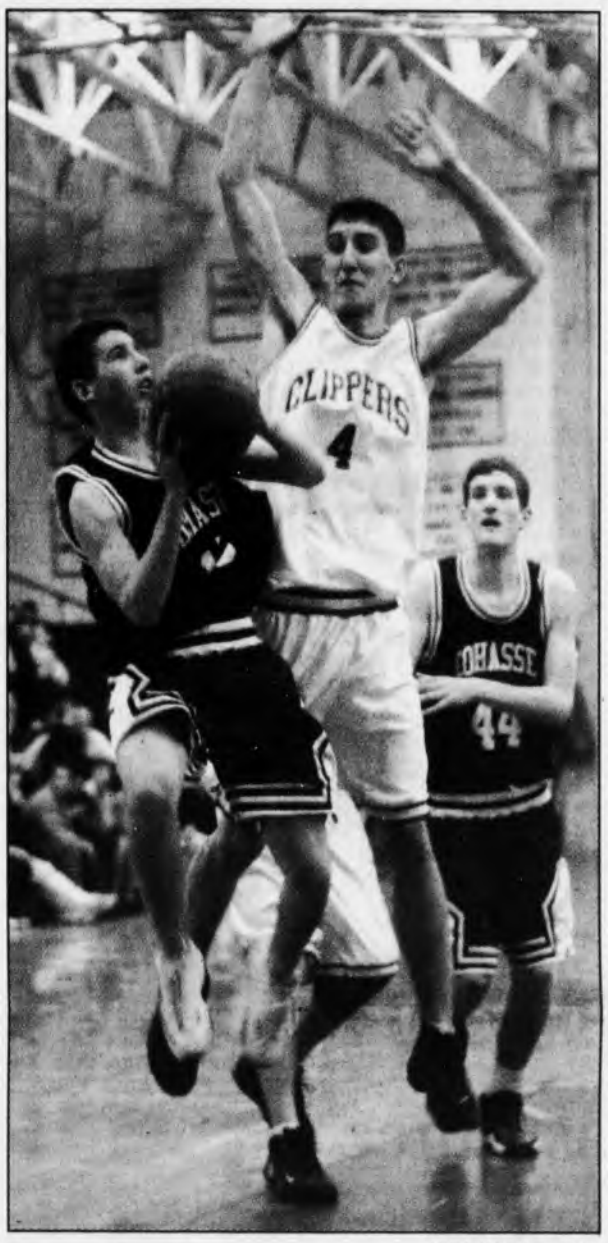
By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Going into Tuesday night's action, there were five teams in the South Shore League separated by a mere one game.

If Norwell had beaten Carver on Tuesday, as they did in the first go round, there could be a four way tie for the South Shore League crown. As it turned out, the Crusaders hung on to defeat Norwell to claim the top spot all to their own.

With all these exciting games, two points can mean a win, and in this high intensity atmosphere, a win can mean the world.

What does this all mean? But of course, the playoffs are about to begin.



For Ron Ford, tenth year coach of the boys basketball team at Cohasset High School, the post-season is when he can really see what his team is made of. And, so far this season, he and many fans and enthusiasts have been quite impressed.

Standing with a record of 12-7 after three straight losses to Hull, Harwich and Abington (Tuesday night), the Skippers could fall anywhere between a seed of number seven and thirteen.

"If it ended today," appraised Ford two days after the Harwich loss, "we would be number 11."

However, with 22 teams already having registered the necessary 10 wins for tourney qualification, and with a few more expected to get in within this next week, the door is wide open for any number of challengers.

This closeness between the teams was reflected by Norton, who was in the number 13 spot a week ago, earlier this week defeating the SSL champion Carver, and the number 2 ranked team in the entire Division 3 South Sectional.

Cohasset's Matt Bilodeau (with ball) tries to squeeze one off past Norwell center Ted Hughes in South Shore League action earlier this month, as Skippers freshman center Sean Connoly look on.

As for Cohasset, a win this Thursday at home against the Vikings of South Shore Voke Tech would most likely result in a preliminary round home game against Foxboro, Dedham or Martha'a Vineyard.

"I am just happy we are going into our last game still in the hunt," said Ford, smiling.

Cohasset did lose ground with the three losses, all but eliminating the chance of a first round bye or even first round home game.

The first of the three was a heart-breaking 73-72 overtime loss to SSL rival Hull. This marked the first time all season that Cohasset has been in a game that came right down to the wire and lost.

"We put ourselves in a hole, and we just couldn't dig ourselves out," offered Ford. "You have got to be lucky, and we probably used that all up in the Carver game."

Ford is referring to the 66-65 win over the Crusaders, where senior captain TJ Bilodeau hit a buzzer beating shot to win the game.

Bilodeau, a native of Hull, had a great game against his fellow residents, putting up 17 points, six steals and four assists. Senior captain Erik Shea also led the offense with 19 points, on 8-of-14 shooting from the floor, to go along with six steals.

This game really came down to size, and the Pirates "Twin Towers"— senior John Lidington and sophomore Chris Tabella— came up…er, big. Using both their height and quickness to their advantage, the duo combined for 42 of their team's 73 points, while tallying a combined 22 rebounds and 13 blocks.

EXTRA POINTS

WITH MIKE SPELLMAN

It's been pretty clear to me for a while now that wrestlers and, even more so, their coaches have a real chip on their shoulders in regards to the lack of attention they receive from fans and media alike. As sports editor for a number of town papers, this was for me, quite frankly, a minor source of annoyance at the beginning of the winter sports season.

What has only become increasingly clear over the last few months, however, is just how much of a right these wrestling folk have to this chip. Hell, I'll go so far as to say they have an obligation to spread their word. Wrestling is a great sport! If more of you would give it a chance, as I was cajoled and shamed into doing, I'm sure the majority of you who truly consider yourselves sports fans would see this too.

Excuse my bluntness, but I have only recently come to know what a dramatic, compelling, and entertaining take high school wrestling provides. In fact, I think it is pretty tough to argue the assertion that wrestling comes as close to capturing athletic competition in its purest sense as any other. I've also come to realize what a shame it is more people haven't realized this.

Though there have been signs in recent years that the sport of wrestling (yes, I mean "the sport"; not the moronic fluff that far too frequently pollutes our airwaves and appeals to people's worst instincts) has gained in popular appreciation, it still has a long way to go before it climbs out of the shadow as a winter sport of basketball and hockey (two sports I also enjoy immensely).

Even indoor track seems to have a more loyal following. In one big way, this is understandable: track events are among the easiest to follow and comprehend. Run the fastest, jump the highest or furthest or throw this, that or the other thing the best, and you win. What could be simpler than that. Heck, you could plop down a Sahara Desert nomad with absolutely no exposure to any sports culture and he'd get that.

ASIDE TO THE TRACKSTERS AND THEIR PARENTS: I have great respect for anyone who participates in track and field. However, I will opine unabashedly that I can not see how any track event would hold anywhere near the spectator appeal of wrestling. Besides, track goes school year round. Wrestling programs basically have three months to sink or swim.

I've been to three wrestling meets this season. Like most, there were a lot of things I didn't know about the sport. For example, up until this point, I didn't even realize they were called "meets." At the first meet, I spent most of my time and reporting energy just trying to find out why one move that didn't look like much prompted the ref to award points, while another that looked much more impressive to these untrained eyes got nada. I also spent quite a bit of time wondering how I didn't read about more injuries being sustained in this sport. I mean, when you've got all these muscle bound kids turning red in the face while simply applying pressure to just a single limb of another, you'd figure there'd be a sickening snap or two somewhere along the line.

Fortunately, I've yet to witness (or hear) a wrestling related injury, and

Skippers place four wrestlers in states

By David Ingber

Last Saturday, the Cohasset wrestling team finished ninth in the 16 team field for the Massachusetts South Sectional title.

With a 9-12 record to round out the regular season, the wrestling team put on a performance on Friday and Saturday that pleased coach Torin Sweeney.

"The sectionals went great," reported the 18th year coach. "We wrestled really well."

The Foxboro squad finished first in front of their home crowd, and Cohasset's South Shore League rival Carver came in second.

Of the 14 grapplers Cohasset had entered in the sectionals, eight placed in the double elimination tournament, exceeding the coach's expectations.

"Going in, I would not have thought we were going to do that," conceded Sweeney, "but I was extremely pleased."

At the 103 pound weight class, junior Vinnie Gratta came off two weeks on the injured list with a broken pinky to finish eighth place.

Phil Strazzula, one of only three freshman in the sectionals for Cohasset, bounced back from losing his first match at 112 pounds to pin the number four and number five seeds. Seeded sixth, Strazzula lost in the consolation round finals to place fourth.

Senior Bea Rankin, wrestling up a weight class at 119, lost her two matches, but stayed competitive in a

Skippers iced from tourney

By David Ingber

Needing to win four of their last five games in order to qualify for the State Tournament, the Cohasset hockey team was eliminated by losses to Scituate and South Boston.

The Ice Skippers were in both games.

The young team lost to Scituate, 4-2 on Wednesday. The Sailors (11-5-1) got help from their core of seven seniors to lead their playoff bound squad to victory.

The contest against South Boston did not go well either, as the Cohasset skaters lost 3-0. Even though their offensive output does not show it, the Skippers recorded 20 more shots on net.

But in a way, that is how the season has gone for Cohasset: the opportunities have often been here, but a few bad bounces cost them in the end.

"There are six games that they lost or tied within the last two or three minutes," noted coach Dennis Walsh, in his 32nd, and possibly final year as the Skippers' skipper. "We could have won any one of those games."

Indeed, Cohasset showed that in the first game of the season, when they were up on Abington by one goal with three minutes left. The

Scituate swimmer shines in and out of pool

If she hadn't won that first race, who knows what Garet Jacobucci would be doing right now.

I'm told they're really not much more common than in other contact sports.

"Limbering up is a very big part of this sport." explained Scituate coach Tom Giacomozzi. "That's just one of the reasons I think these kids are truer athletes than in any other sport."

See what I mean about the chip on the shoulder? And Coach G is more than happy to expand on this assertion.

"I look at these kids having to maintain weight or trying to drop five pounds in a day or two while still not losing strength. Can you tell me of any other high school sport where that kind of discipline is required."

Nope; not me.

It is also a largely unrewarding sport, relatively speaking, any argument Silver Lake coach Greg Black takes up enthusiastically.

"Wrestling is just such a grueling sport, and the only real satisfaction comes from winning," offered the veteran SL coach. "Sometimes these kids just say enough is a enough. I'm amazed more of them don't. The level of commitment these kids who stick with it over the years is just fantastic."

I don't know if Greg was thinking of any particular wrestler when he was making these comments, but I know I was.

His name is Eric Supple, a 92 pound freshman who wrestles for Blacks' Silver Lake varsity team in the 103 pound weight division. I've see this kid wrestle twice this year against kids who barely managed to stay under the maximum weight requirement for the 103 pound class. Both of these mighty mites towered over Eric, and I was instantly reminded of how I felt the few times I interviewed Robert Parish or Joe Kleine. Fortunately, I never had to sidle up to them on the mat, and I can tell you I wouldn't have for any promised reward. So Eric earned my respect before "go" for even climbing in there.

It didn't take long to realize that Eric's main goal in both of these matches against seasoned wrestlers (who I found out later were among the tops in this division) was to hold the opponent to as few points as possible. A win simply was not in the cards. A forfeit is good for six points in a wrestling, the same as a pin. A win on points is good for three, a minor tech win (+7 points) for four and a major tech win (15+) for five.

Eric was able to avoid the pin until the third period the first time I saw him. It was amazing to watch as he kept ducking and spinning his way out of potential pins and point awarding situations. The next time out, Eric put on an even more compelling show against 105 pound Bridgewater-Raynham grappler Craig Lundlay. Despite giving away close to 15 percent in body mass, the plucky 14-year old was extremely aggressive, repeatedly going for Lundlay's legs. By the third period, Supple was clearly exhausted but still battled valiantly to avoid surrendering the final few points that would give Lundlay the major tech win. Unfortunately, he fell short of that goal with just 15 seconds remaining in the match. With his face beet red and covered with perspiration, he was barely able to walk off the mat afterwards, where his teammates lined up to congratulate him for a phenomenal effort.

This was the opening match in the showdown for the Old Colony League title two weeks ago at Silver Lake High School, with both teams entering the match unbeaten in league competition. B-R won the meet 34-32 on the last of the night's 14-matches when Lee Beane, the number 1 ranked heavyweight in the state, managed to beat SL's Joe Briggs on points. This match was just as compelling as the first, and I could have found great angles for at least half the other matches on the night.

I'd love to lay all of this out in glorious detail. Unfortunately, I don't have the time or space. Sad that there weren't more of you there to see it.

very tough class.

At 125, senior John Hertig won two and lost two to finish the sectionals at eighth place in his weight class.

Sophomore Terry Baroudi, one of Cohasset's higher seeds at number five in the 130 pound weight class, finished third in the tournament. Baroudi's only loss came to the number one seed in the semi-finals, but Baroudi did knock off Carver's Duncan Banks, who finished fourth in the states last year for the Crusaders.

Senior captain Dan Duffy, seeded third at 135 pounds, did not disappoint the oddsmakers by placing third, his only loss coming to number two seed Chris Peters of Scituate.

At 140 pounds, another of the Skipper freshmen, Ian Hickey, did record a win early on in the competition, but was knocked out by losses to the number four and number five seed. Hickey managed to get all three of his opponents on their back, but only managed the one pin.

Junior captain Dan Littauer, seeded third at 145 pounds, came in second in his weight class, losing only to Foxboro's Mike Ragusa in the finals, 8-3.

Littauer had Ragusa in a fireman's carry, but was ruled out of bounds by the referee.

Senior captain Justin Langham placed eighth in a difficult class, winning two and losing two.

Sophomore Mike Casey did not place at 160, but won his first match to get into the top bracket, losing his next two.

At 191, Braun Goodson placed eighth, recording two wins and two losses.

Unseeded 215 pounder John Hussey, a junior, won his first match, then was eliminated in two matches against high seed opponents.

Freshman heavyweight Jake Berger lost both of his matches to round out the competition.

Of all the Skipper wrestlers, four qualified for Division 3 State Competition, to be held this weekend at Wayland High School. Interestingly, one representative from each grade will wrestle: senior Duffy, junior Littauer, sophomore Baroudi, and freshman Strazzula.

Strazzula will be following in the footsteps of such Cohasset notables as Nathan Fiore and Mike Baird for qualifying for states as a freshman.

Cohasset had some momentum heading into this tournament, after beating Norwell, Middleboro, Wellesley and Carver consecutively to end the season.

Though the 9-12 record may not be up to par with many past seasons, Sweeney was pleased with the strong finish and looks to the future with optimism.

lead in scoring, narrowly missed a triple double, coming up just two blocks short of completing the rare feat.

The next big blow to the Skippers record occurred three days later, when, after the hour and a half bus ride, Cohasset was jumped on by their Cape Cod hosts, losing 61-46.

The Skippers were without captain Doug O'Brien (sickness) and junior forward Nick Bolster (ankle injury).

"I went down to Harwich knowing we would be in a lot of trouble," said Ford, referring to those absences.

Shea and Bilodeau both recorded nine points to lead the Skippers in , that category.

Sophomore power forward Ben Lynner came a lay-up shy of his fourth double-double of the season, as he knocked down eight points and 10 boards to go with three steals.

Arguably, the most costly loss for the Skippers in the SSL standings was on Tuesday against Abington, where the Green Wave became only the second visiting team to beat Cohasset in Sullivan Gym.

Cohasset again was playing without the help of O'Brien and Bolster, which helped the Green Wave to a 64-52 victory.

Bilodeau and Shea led Cohasset with 17 and 14 points, respectively, while freshman center Sean Connolly had one of his best games of the season with 11 points and six rebounds.

Senior forward Nick French, a former resident of Cohasset, impressed his former teammates with 17 points to lead Abington.

Even with the string of losses, Cohasset is very much in the picture for coming away with a Sectional title. Everything will unfold when the tourney starts over February break.

Game Notes

Hull:

-Hull made its first nine foul shots of the game, but missed their tenth with 30 seconds left in regulation, a shot which would have won the game for the Pirates without overtime.

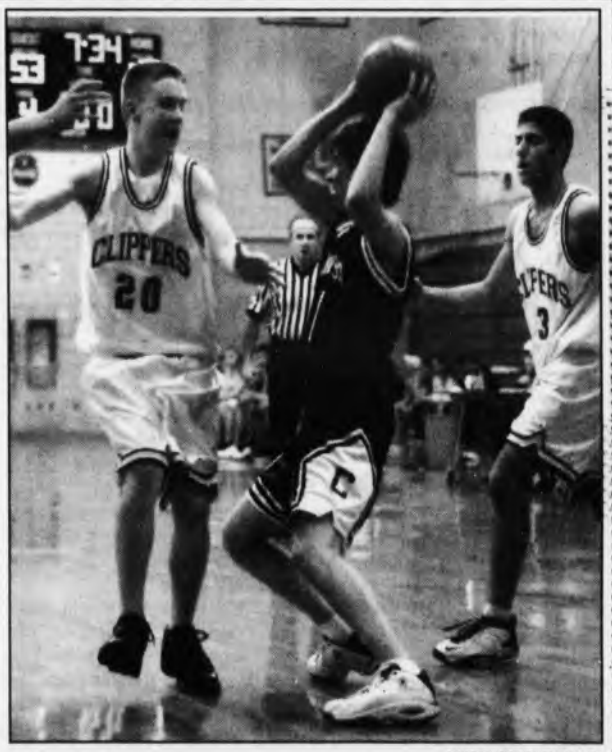
-Tabella and Lidington shot a combined 17-of-19 from the floor.

-The two teams combined for four 3-pointers the entire game.

Harwich:

-Both teams made 17 two point field goals, and 12 free throws, but the Roughriders five 3-pointers were the only difference in the game. (This Game Note courtesy of JV forward sophomore Ross Lieb-Lappen.)

-Sophomore center Scott Faber, now a JV swing player with the tournament coming up and Cohasset in need of height, became the 14th Cohasset varsity player to score this year, doing it with a foul shot late in the game.



-Harwich led 24-23 at halftime, and never trailed the entire second half.

Abington:

-The two teams combined for 24-for-30 from the foul line, including 9-for-10 in the first half.

-Junior guard James Smith for the Green Wave scored all six of his first half points on two point baskets, and all five of his second half points on foul shots.

-Cohasset took three charges, two by junior point guard Matt Bilodeau and the other by sophomore forward Ian Kidder.

now how fate intervened to get her in the pool as a competitive swimmer for the first time....fun for everyone, that is, but her opponents.

As a 10-year old, Garet didn't like it when a few of her friends were called away from play time to go to "swim practice" at the Scituate Knight of Columbus, so she prevailed on her parents to join up as well.

They agreed, and it didn't take long for Garet to figure out that this was for her. In her first race, a 25-yard backstroke, she lapped a field of more experienced swimmers on strength alone.

"I went in just wanting to hang around with my friends, but I think I saw with that first win that I had a little bit of talent for it," offered the modest 17-year old.

She wasn't the only one. Jim Zotz, who was at that time the Aquatic Director for the K of C and the Brandeis University Swim Coach, also witnessed the race and told Garet's parents, Jake Jacobucci and Claire Cook, that their daughter did indeed have the potential to be something special in the water.

Garet stuck with her friends at the K of C for a few more years, quickly becoming the class of the club. It was at this point, that mom and dad concluded Garet should take it up a notch, and they signed her up with the Gators Club team, which operates out of Bentley College in Waltham.

Annual registration is $3,000 for this elite squad, which competes regularly on a national level. When you add in costs associated with travel, uniform requirements, gas...and then there's the 3:30 wake up calls... obviously, there's been a few sacrifices in the Jacobucci household, not that there was ever really any doubt as to what would happen once the passion reared its head.

"As a parent, when you see your child want something that much, how can you not be supportive," said Cook, who also has an eighth grade son, Kaden. "We just went with the flow as much as we could."

Cook would not offer estimates of how much they have spent to support Garet's hobby over the last five years, merely conceding that it's been "a good chunk of our expendable income."

Of course, this is a situation that has improved dramatically over the last several months. Cook, a part-time teacher, had her first novel— "Ready to Fall"— published in May. She jokes that she penned the bulk of this work while sitting in the mini-van outside of Garet's swimming practice. Off of the success of this literary debut, Cook recently signed a lucrative two book deal with Viking Press. Her second work of fiction, entitled "Must Love Dogs," should hit the stands in a few months.

Garet is all smiles as she climbs out of the pool shortly after her record setting wins in the 50 and 100 meter races at the All-Conference meet on Friday in Quincy.

Fortunately, this is not the only way in which Garet's swimming passion is now paying off.

Last week, the Scituate teen received word via Fedex that she'd been accepted into Emory University, her number one choice among colleges. Emory, which is located in near Atlanta, Georgia, has one of the top swim programs in the nation. In fact, the school hosted the swimming events for the 1998 Summer Olympics. This school also boasts the highest GPA nationally for any swim team. Garet was also recruited by Yale, William & Mary and UCal-Berkeley, but Emory was her clear preference almost from the beginning of the search process.

"Obviously, I'm pretty excited right now," said Garet, who plans to major in Political Science with an eye towards becoming an attorney. "Emory has everything I was looking for. Plus, I've got some family down there, so that will make things easier for me."

With Emory being a Division 3 school, athletic scholarships are not an option. However, now that Garet has been formally accepted, an attractive financial aid package should be forthcoming.

But that's the future. Right now, Garet still has to get through her senior year at S.H.S and, more immediately, the swim season for the Cohasset/Scituate squad.

Last Friday, Garet broke the league record in both the 50 and 100 meter races at the league championships in Quincy. On Feb 25, she will compete as the favorite for the state championship in both of these events. She modestly notes the opinion that she has "a pretty good shot." The one person who is in perhaps a better position to prognosticate, seems a little more certain.

"Garet WILL take first place in both those events," stated first year Scit/Coh coach Jamie Kearney emphatically. "She really is in a class by herself, and she's at her best when the pressure is on."

To illustrate this final point, Kearney pointed to Garet's individual times in the 50 versus her times for the same distance swimming the anchor leg for the relay team. Often forced to come from behind in the team event, Jacobucci has consistently posted her best times here. A few weeks back, she notched a 24.0 in her 50-meter leg of the relay, a mere second off of the Olympic qualifying time. Her high water mark solo is 24.91.

"I think that kind of thing holds true for most of your top swimmers," appraised Kearney, herself a former elite performer in the pool. "Competition brings out their best in most of them, and Garet is certainly no exception."

As an elite swimmer, Garet also appears to be something of an exception out of the water.

"As talented as she is, she is a great team member," reported Kearney, a former coach at Westwood High who had been away from competitive swimming for 10 years before this winter. "I can't even imagine what it would have been like coaching without her here this year. There have been a lot of changes in the way things are done since I stopped coaching, and Garet is the one who clued me in on them."

According to the coach, this willingness to help also extends to team members, something she confesses to finding nearly as amazing as her exploits in the pool.

"It's easy to get a little bit of attitude when you're this good this young," said Kearney, who admitted she was speaking from personal experience. "But Garet really doesn't have any of that. I don't know if I was really a prima donna when I was in her position, but I know I wasn't as down to earth and mature as her."

Skippers iced from tourney

Green Wave was able to come back and win the game before the regulation buzzer sounded, perhaps setting a bad tone for the rest of the season.

Cohasset's most recent game resulted in a 4-3 triumph over Trinity Catholic. Walsh asserted of that game: "We really outplayed them."

Although the victory came after the Skippers had been pushed from playoff contention, it was sweet to get back at this opponent. In the first go round between these two teams this season, Trinity Catholic overcame a three goal first period deficit to win.

It is disappointing to not make the playoffs, especially when they were so close.

"I really thought we could have been in the states," appraised Walsh. "They should have been in."

Still, Walsh is not displeased with the effort he received from his young team.

Thinking back to the beginning of the season, Walsh stated, "I thought we were a good skating team, and we still are. We just didn't play as a team as well as we could have."

Though Walsh would have liked to have seen more of a team concept, he cannot possibly be disappointed with some of the outstanding individual efforts he received over the last few months.

Notably, sophomore centers Matt Davis and Greg O'Connell are conducting a nip and tuck battle to the end in the team scoring race, and both are also among the league leaders in that category.

Walsh was also quick to point to the great play of his inexperienced defense, as well as to junior goalie Dan Kinchla, a converted forward, who played admirably in his first year as netminder.

The defense of Cohasset was also superb, despite junior Eric Libby and freshman Mike Devine having never played under Walsh before.

Though the inexperience of this team may have contributed to some of the key losses, losing only three seniors will be a big plus next year.

"If everyone comes back, we should have a good team," asserted Walsh.

Mystery writer

Buttonwood Books & Toys presents Dennis Lehane who will speak and sign in Cohasset on Sunday afternoon, March 4 at 2 p.m. "Mystic River" (William Morrow $25) is Lehane's latest novel. Introducing new characters whose lives are as intertwined as the neighborhoods from which they emerged, Lehane has captured the cadence of their language and their inner-city lifestyle as played against the backdrop of their blue-collar neighborhood. Lehane is a first rate storyteller and "Mystic River" is a psychological thriller that snares you immediately. Lehane was born and raised in Dorchester.. He has written six novels, "A Drink Before The War"; "Darkness, Take My Hand"; "Sacred"; "Gone, Baby Gone"; "Prayers For Rain"; and "Mystic River". His short story "Running Out of Dog" was recently selected for publication in The Best American Mystery Short Stories of the Century. Dennis graduated from B.C. High School and then attended Emerson College and the University of Massachusetts, before settling into a creative writing program at Eckard College in St. Petersburg, Fla.

POLICE BRIEFS

Stolen car recovered

Quick response by Cohasset police officer Christy J. Tarantino Jr. helped recover a car that was allegedly stolen from Hull within minutes of it being reported as stolen.

Tarantino was on patrol on Hull Street at 1:20 p.m. Monday when he observed a Gold Delta 88 that had been reported as stolen just ten minutes before. He activated the cruiser's blue, flashing lights and siren and followed the car over the town line where it came to a stop on Nantasket Avenue near the Hall Estate in Hull.

"At this time I initiated a felony motor vehicle stop," Tarantino stated in his report. Assisting at the scene were Hull officers Dale Shea and Christine Chagnon.

Hull police charged John L. Gardner, 36, of 101 West St., Plympton with larceny of a motor vehicle, OUI (alcohol) third or subsequent offense and driving with a suspended license (fifth or subsequent offense). Gardner was arraigned on the charges later that day at Hingham District Court.

OUI arrest

A cell caller alerted police of a brown Toyota being driven erratically southbound on Rte. 3A at about 6:40 p.m. Friday. Several minutes later the Toyota passed a police cruiser near Cohasset Plaza. The officer followed the car.

"I immediately noticed the driver of the Toyota was drifting and weaving over the double yellow line forcing northbound traffic to swerve to avoid being hit head-on," officer William Quigley stated in his report.

The driver stopped at 3A and Pond Street and was placed under arrest. Police charged Paul F. Tracey, 37, of 50 Oceanside Drive in Scituate with operating under the influence (liquor) and failure to stay within marked lanes. He was arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court. A pre-trail conference is slated for March 23.

Local officer completes leadership course

Sgt. Robert W. Jackson, a resident of Cohasset and a member of the Cohasset Police Dept., was among 39 law enforcement officials to complete a three-week Command Training Program Feb. 9. The program was held at the New England Institute of Law Enforcement Management at Babson College and sponsored by the New England Association of Chiefs of Police.

The training program provides command officers with the skills needed to exercise effective management practices. Command training concentrates on the operational aspects of the command officer's responsibilities including problem solving, community policing and leadership. The New England Institute's faculty is drawn from colleges and universities including Babson, Bentley and Brandeis, as well as the business and law enforcement professions.

The program offers courses in community relations, decision-making, planning, staffing and other management and human relations subjects. Gerald F. Burke, retired major of the Massachusetts State Police, is director of the New England Institute.

Plymouth artist piles on the paint for South Shore shows

What was once an outlet for personal expression has become a living for painter Rita Brace. The Plymouth artist recently took first prize for an oil painting from the Cape Cod Art Association and is currently displaying her work in two South Shore shows —one at the Rockland Library and the other at the Tufts Library in Weymouth. Brace will take part in another show next month, displaying her work at the Tishman-Speyer building in Boston. Her work is also often shown at Artistic Appetites in Hyannis.

"Everything just started happening," Brace said.

Brace said her Rockland and Weymouth shows will be running through the month of February. While many of her favorite works are being exhibited in Rockland, Brace said she's also proud of the paintings on display at Weymouth's Tufts Library.

"My best stuff is at the Rockland show," Brace said, adding the exhibit consists of about 25 different paintings consisting of various still life and landscape pieces.

Brace said the paintings at both shows reflect her artistic style.

"I paint pretty loosely," Brace said of her work. "I'm very free in my style, and I use a lot of color and a lot of paint. Some people say I paint like a millionaire based on how much paint I use. People often ask me if I'm using some sort of special paint, but I'm not—I just use a lot of it."

Brace said she believes piling the paint on is a "freer" way to express herself, and she stressed the fact that she believes an abundant amount of paint makes a given work of art look better.

Brace said her favorite medium is oil painting, but she said she also experiments with watercolors and acrylic paints. But it doesn't matter what medium she's working in as long as she is painting scenes from real life.

"I like to go out and paint," she said. "I just get out there and do it. I also like painting under pressure."

"I just go for color. If I see something interesting in terms of color, I paint it. It doesn't matter what it is."

Pressure is nothing new for Brace, who has four teenaged children which often leaves her a limited amount of time each day to paint.

Part of the challenge for her in terms of her art is getting a giving painting done in a short period of time—painting under pressure, as Brace referred to it.

"I love driving around trying to find the right scene to paint," Brace said. "I go anywhere from Scituate to Provincetown. There's just millions of gorgeous places to go within those areas, and they all have their own qualities."

Brace said because of her particular onsite-painting style, she never really tries to incorporate any deep themes in her work.

"I just go for color," she said. "If I see something interesting in terms of color, I paint it. It doesn't matter what it is."

Brace's love affair with painting began at the age of 16 when she got her first "paint box."

"I just started painting on my own," she said. "I kind of taught myself." Since those early days of painting, Brace has been trying to make herself a better artist and she has.

These days, Brace studies with various local artists and involves herself in a number of painting workshops. She is also involved with a large amount of art organizations including The Braintree, Weymouth, and Cape Cod art associations, the South Shore Art Center, the North River Art Society, and Oil Painters of America.

"I'm always trying to learn new things," Brace said. She said she is often experimenting with new techniques and new scenarios, and she will continue to do so in the future.

Brace said she believes a good painting is something which makes people think.
